

MIGHT HAVE ESCAPED DETECTION HAD HE REMAINED ON BROADWAY

Ormiston, Elusive Angelus Temple Radio Operator, Says He Was Safe in Great White Way of New York

Chicago, Dec. 10. (AP)—Kenneth G. Ormiston, elusive radio operator of Angelus Temple, Los Angeles, believes he never would have been found if he had stayed on Broadway.

"I roamed the gay white way for months this summer and thought to see my picture in the paper," he told a reporter for the Chicago Herald and Examiner, who interviewed him at Harrisburg, Pa.

"In spite of my limp no one recognized me. My only disguise was a little sandy mustache," a copyrighted story quoted him as saying.

Ormiston talked on many subjects during an automobile trip "somewhere in Pennsylvania"—the first leg of his journey to Chicago in company of detectives and newspaper men—but declined to answer any question concerning Aimee Semple McPherson, Los Angeles evangelist, with whom his name has been linked by West coast authorities.

Flood of New Statements

The finding of the radio man, who had lived in Harrisburg several months, under the name of "Fred Rogers," unlocked a flood of new statements from persons interested in the McPherson kidnapping case, including a declaration by Ormiston's father, W. C. Ormiston, that he was not the aid of his son.

"I've stayed out of this case for six months, but now I'm in it," the older Ormiston said in San Francisco. "I don't want them planting any more lies on Kenneth." He expressed belief that his son had not lied, but if he has, he has lied like a politician.

From Mrs. McPherson herself came the statement that "the arrest of Kenneth Ormiston means nothing whatever to me. I have repeated, clearly, that I know nothing of Ormiston or his whereabouts, either now or since I was kidnapped."

Casualties, investigators from the office of District Attorney A. J. C. of Los Angeles believed they had uncovered a new clue when they traced an automobile, ownership of which had been traced to Ormiston, to a garage at Oakland, Calif. Two men, a detective from Keyes' office, who resembled in color and texture a hair of Mrs. McPherson, were seen on the back seat.

Ormiston's father, who said he had been the search, maintained that what was found while he was looking for his son. "But afterwards, when I went looking, they said they had found a hair and a pendant from a woman."

May Have Wife in Brazil
Harrisburg, Pa., Dec. 10. (AP)—Correspondent discovered in the trunk of Kenneth G. Ormiston, radio operator and "key man," in the Aimee Semple McPherson case, indicated, a local detective who aided in his apprehension, that he had a wife in Brazil.

The long sought radio operator was captured Wednesday night in an apartment he had occupied here under the name of "F. Lininger," for months. He was traced here by two detectives by means of a letter which was said to have been taken to the city. An air of mystery surrounded the case. Ormiston was taken away from here by the detectives in a taxicab yesterday, and the city was reported to have boarded the car for the West at Altoona.

Carson, Harrisburg city detective who assisted in locating Ormiston, took possession of the effects found in his room and said today he was preparing to send them to Chicago. Carson characterized the whole case as a "publicity stunt," but declined to amplify this statement. He said a number of letters, including a diplomatic one from five radio schools, were found in Ormiston's trunk. In addition to a number of letters, Ormiston's apartment here was packed with a few blocks of the detective. In explaining why he had not recognized Carson, said the detective furnished the department with the man with the actual appearance of the man.

"No detective in the world would have Ormiston on the description furnished to local police," said Carson. "The photograph with which he was furnished was taken Ormiston as a grown man. He further changed his appearance by the use of glasses. In no description furnished the local police did it say that the man was limped. It's almost impossible to recognize him from his photograph."

RAISES SALARIES OF U. S. JUDICIARY

Bill Granting Increase to Judges in All Courts Passed by House

NOW GOES TO WHITE HOUSE

Rayney of Illinois Attacks Chief Justice Taft for Accepting Carnegie Fund Annuity—Charge "Without Point," Declares Chairman Graham
Washington, Dec. 10. (AP)—The bill providing substantial salary increases for United States judges, hanging fire since last session has been approved by the house, 295 to 39. It now goes to President Coolidge, who has advocated a higher pay schedule for the judiciary.

The measure, passed by the senate before the recent recess, drew the fire in the house of a number of farm bloc members, who expressed opposition to salary increases until something is done about farm relief.

It also came in for an attack from Representative Rayney (Dem., Ill.), who objected to a provision raising Chief Justice Taft's pay to $20,500. He said Mr. Taft was receiving an annuity of $10,000 from the estate of Andrew Carnegie, "a subsidy from the United States Steel corporation," he called it. His amendment to fix the chief justice's salary at $15,000, however, was rejected.

Received Annuity After Presidency
Leading the debate for passage, Chairman Graham of the judiciary committee said the primary purpose of the bill was to make a fair adjustment of salaries with living expenses and to make it possible for the bar to send its most gifted members to the bench.

He described Rayney's charges as "entirely without point," since the Carnegie annuity was provided for long before Mr. Taft became a member of the supreme court.

The bill would increase the annual compensation of associate supreme court justices from $14,500 to $20,000 and would raise the salaries of judges in the lower United States courts proportionately.

FARMHAND SLAYS AND RUNS AWAY

Kidnap Daughter After Killing Both Parents

New Bloomfield, Pa., Dec. 10. (AP)—A demented farm hand yesterday beat to death his employer and wife when they refused his demands for money and then kidnaped their daughter.

The victims were George D. Shull, 56, and his wife, Ella.

Their alleged assailant, Paul Sheaffer, turned away from Mrs. Shull when she fell unconscious and started on Mrs. Ester Kell, a daughter. Heeding her pleas for mercy, Sheaffer half dragged the younger woman into Shull's automobile and started away with her.

After traveling almost to Harrisburg, something went wrong with the car. When the man got out to repair the trouble, Mrs. Kell drove away.

A state wide search for Sheaffer is under way.

DOHENY UNDER FIRE OF THE PROSECUTION

OIL CASE DEFENSE PLAYS TRUMP CARD

Doheny, Millionaire Defendant, Testifies in Own Behalf

COLORFUL, DRAMATIC STORY

Direct Examination Consumes Four Hours—Tells Story of Life From Days of Mule Driver to Defendant in Oil Reserve Lease Action Now on Trial

Washington, Dec. 10. (AP)—The defense played its trump card yesterday in the Fall-Doheny oil conspiracy trial, weaving into the record one of the most colorful and dramatic stories which ever has gone before a jury in an American criminal proceeding.

Edward L. Doheny, 70-year-old multi-millionaire oil man, in a four-hour direct examination told the story of his life from the time he was a "shave and mule driver," in the old West until he found himself defendant in a suit involving naval oil reserve leases in which he had estimated there might be a profit of $100,000,000.

His story was an unqualified denial of all charges of wrong-doing, unpatriotic intent, or corrupt purpose in the leasing negotiations. He repeated what he told the senate oil committee three years ago concerning his $100,000 loan to Albert B. Fall, then secretary of the interior, in November, 1921, when the oil reserve policies still were on the fire in the Navy and Interior departments. "It was a personal transaction with an old prospecting friend."

Interest in Pearl Harbor Contract
His personal interest in the Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, oil storage project, which led to the leasing of the Elk Hills, Cal., reserves grew out of conversations with a naval officer which convinced him the "menace of Japan" in the Pacific was in 1921 of vital importance, he told the jury.

Mrs. Doheny earlier in the day had described her husband's conversations regarding the loan to Fall and produced the missing note signature of Fall which has been in her possession ever since the first feeble twister of the oil storm swept over the national capital to the United States senate and thence to the United States courts in California, Wyoming, Minnesota and the District of Columbia.

Edward L. Doheny, Jr., the accused son, also took the stand and told of delivering the $100,000 to Fall in Wardman Park hotel in Washington November 30, 1921, and of handing the note to his father in New York the next day with no writing in the space provided for the interest rate.

Doheny Letter to Coolidge
President Coolidge's name was brought into the proceeding with the offer in evidence of a letter Doheny had written him on March 8, 1924, regarding progress under the Pearl Harbor contract. Government objections to admission of the letter on the ground that it had no bearing on the conspiracy charge were sustained and the document did not go before the jury.

In whispered argument over the bench it was stated by defense counsel that the White House never had replied to the communication.

Two more admirals concerning strategic consideration which impelled the war plans division to determine upon the $100,000,000 Pearl Harbor naval base in 1920, and tomorrow, under present defense plans, Secretary Wilbur will be called for questioning as to the most recent advice from the commander of the Pacific squadron prior to the execution of the Pan-American Petroleum Transport company's Pearl Harbor storage contract in 1921.

Fall's Tender of Ranch Stock
It was revealed for the first time today that Fall had tendered stocks valued at $200,000 to Doheny in March, 1925, as security for the loan, on which he had been unable, up to that time, to pay interest.

Government counsel late in the day entered the preliminary stage of a rigorous cross-examination of Doheny, but deferred their assault upon his story until today in response to the defense suggestion that witness showed marked evidence of fatigue.

Half a dozen more character witnesses from Los Angeles, all of whom testified to Doheny's reputation for honesty, integrity and patriotism, completed the defense case for the day.

Sitting with his handaged infected arm toward the jury, and frequently using it in forceful gestures, Doheny told his story in tones of calm and poise. Only twice did his gestures and speech reveal emotion, once when he told of his agitation over what he had learned from Rear Admiral J. K. Robison regarding the strategic situation in the Pacific, and again when he described the "water hole economy" of New Mexico, which impelled him to loan Fall money with which to extend his ranch holdings.

Millionaire Oil Magnate Bombarded With Pointed Questions As To Associations With Albert B. Fall

Washington, Dec. 10. (AP)—Under cross examination in the oil case trial for criminal conspiracy today, Edward Doheny said the $100,000 loan to Albert Fall was not all the money he had advanced his friend and co-defendant since Fall entered the cabinet. He said he loaned Fall $5,000 before he came here for trial.

Doheny also disclosed that he had loaned the Obregon government of Mexico $10,000,000 in the form of advance taxes on Pan-American-Mexican properties. Fall acted as agent for the Pan-American interest in arranging this loan after he left the cabinet, the witness said.

Owen J. Roberts Conducts Cross-Examination

Owen J. Roberts, of the government's special counsel, conducted the cross-examination, which began as soon as court convened this morning and promised to continue for several hours. Sometime during the afternoon Secretary Wilbur of the navy was to be questioned about navy records of a "war scare" in the Pacific at the time Doheny was given the lease to the Elk Hills oil reserve. It was indicated that Fall might also take the stand.

Roberts lost no time in getting the cross-examination of the millionaire defendant under way. He directed Doheny's testimony immediately to the Elk Hills lease of Dec. 11, 1922, in which more than 30,000 acres of naval oil land went to Doheny's Pan-American Petroleum company of California for royalty operation while Fall was in the cabinet.

Witness Is Smiling
Doheny today was smiling, although he had passed a restless night as a result of an arm infection which has kept him in bed much of the time for the past week. Pain from the infection had kept him awake, his attendants said, most of the night. He again carried the arm in a sling.

The prosecutor asked if a $15,000,000 investment by the Doheny company under the lease would not result in benefits quite apart from any profits which might accrue through the production of naval oil from Elk Hills. Doheny said it would, but that it would be impossible to separate benefits and assign proportions to the respective sources.

Doheny agreed that he was familiar with government estimates that the government carried 150,000,000 to 200,000,000 barrels of oil before his company bid for the lease. He added that it never was prudent to base an operating judgment upon maximum estimates for that was how most oil men went wrong.

Did Not Tell All He Knew
With a whimsical smile, the witness conceded that he had not told "everything I knew" when he appeared in January, 1924, before the senate oil committee.

This was in response to a question whether he did not in fact have some advance information of Fall's retirement from the cabinet in 1921. Doheny said he did. "I wasn't telling Senator Pittman (a member of the committee) everything I knew. He wasn't very polite to me and I wasn't very polite to him," added the witness.

He then corroborated his statement before the senate committee that his $100,000 loan to Fall, before the Elk Hills lease was awarded, was kept secret because he feared that unless all the facts surrounding his relations with the then secretary of interior, were known, the transaction would not be "understood" by the public.

The $100,000 Loan
Roberts bore down then on the $100,000. "Why did you send your son with the money?"

"Because I had rather trust my son than anybody else."

"Did you send money to Maxine by your son?"

"No, by other trusted agents."

The prosecutor also hammered hard at Doheny's statement that he didn't tell the senate committee everything.

"You know, Mr. Doheny, that you were under oath before the senate committee?"

"I do, very well."

"And you now say that—"

"I answered Senator Pittman's questions truthfully."

"Then you had discussed Fall's resignation?"

"I had not. Fall had not mentioned his thoughts to me. We had not discussed it."

"You say you had no compunction about revealing the loan transaction?"

"No, that's how the senate found out about it. I told the senate committee voluntarily about the loan."

"You did not think that a loan of $100,000 to a cabinet member by a man having dealings with his department might arouse legitimate suspicion?"

"No—none whatever."

ALONE FOR EIGHTEEN YEARS

Indian Woman, Abandoned on Desert Island, Finally Found by Party of Otter Hunters.

On San Nicholas Island, which is uninhabited, a party of sea-otter hunters, landing to chance their luck, found, to their amazement, the imprint of human feet on the sandy shore—imprints freshly made. They scattered in search. But, the wind shifting and commencing to blow hard, they had to regain their vessel before the maker of the marks could be found. It was undeniable, however, a human being lived on this bleak, wind-blown island of sand and tall brushwood.

On returning to the mainland they reported the strange discovery, but nothing was done until a Roman Catholic priest was so moved by the news that he persuaded the captain of a small schooner to sail with him for San Nicolas. After two days' searching he discovered this lonely Crusoe—the first of a new kind. For he found inside a low hut of driftwood a woman more like a beast than a person.

She was clad in otter skins, and the feathered skins of the sea-fowl, and her companion was an otter, which she had caught very young and tamed.

The priest with difficulty got her story, for she had almost forgotten how to speak. Many years previously the small tribe of Indians to which she belonged—inhabitants of San Nicolas from time past—had been shifted by the government to the mainland. As they were taken on board, her baby had fallen into the sea, and she had leaped after him, and in the dusk had been given up as drowned. She reached the shore, however, to find the child was dead. In utter loneliness she had lived there for 18 years.

Whale of a Fish Story.

"It's a whale," more than one visitor asserted who visited Monk's wharf here recently. They were wrong. It was a sturgeon. From the tip of its tail to its snout it measured just 13 feet, and it weighed 988 pounds. This monster fish was taken with a drift net in the Pitt river by an Indian fisherman, and is said to be the second largest ever taken.—New Westminster Correspondence Toronto Globe.

The Wifely Training.

"So you've graduated from college?"
"Yes, sir."
"Studied abroad, too?"
"Yes, sir."
"Consider yourself now fairly well able to get along and adapt yourself in any kind of society?"
"I believe so."
"That's what I used to think, but I lived to discover this: no matter how many college degrees a man earns, and how carefully his parents may have trained him when he gets married there's always a lot that his wife still thinks is necessary to teach him."
