LEGISLATIVE LIGHT.

THE ELECTRIC ARC TURNED ON THE HOOSIER SOLONS.

The Baldheaded Senator and the Young Lady's Note—Been Through the Mill—Monday's Routine Proceedings.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Feb. 10.

A MOST startling thing occurred in the senate. After "St. Peter" McNulty let the parson through the gate the senators of the enviable state of Indiana were called to order at 9 o'clock. It was hardly daylight in the chamber, and was too early for even Senator Yaryan, who gets up at 5 a. m. Elder Julius Caesar Chase prayed, and the hopper was filled with committee reports and bills on second reading.

There was a slight stir on the senate floor, which didn't leak out only among very few. One of the many clerks has enjoyed the acquaintance of an Indianapolis young lady under an assumed name. She was bright enough to learn his real cognomen, and also that he was married, so she sent him a missive from the balcony telling him he would not be expected to call in the evening as per arrangement. The note came down with a page who, by mistake, gave it to a senator. The solon read the note, scratched his head in a perplexed way and read it again. It said he was an old baldheaded wretch, and his chances for a quiet, nice hereafter was about as good as those of a snowflake in a chimney. The senator was mad. He didn't know the young lady—never even heard of her. He discovered the document wasn't for him and cooled down, when the note reached the proper owner, the clerk ranted around over the red carpet, and tried to thrash two of the pages. He was as fresh as a daisy next morning, with his eyes nice and steady, which was evidence enough that he didn't dabble in society the night before.

Inman Liability Bill.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Feb. 10.—The house spent the afternoon in discussing and passing the Inman liability bill, making corporations responsible for injures to employes when caused by negligence of fellow employes. The discussion was watched by a large lobby of organized labor and each member who spoke or voted adverse was made the evident object of note and given to understand that his position would be counted against him in the future.

The surveillance of the lobby is pronounced by spectators as a kind of intimidation. As a result, no amendment nor motion to refer could muster more than twenty-five votes and all precedents were so far set aside under the methods of the laboring men as to cause the passage of the bill under a suspension of the rules, only two representatives voting against it on final vote. The bill has a just principle, it was acknowledged, but on applying only to corporations' representatives, pointed out that it was class legislation and unconstitutional. The senate is expected to expunge the objectionable features. The senate indefinitely postponed the bill to repeal the law prohibiting married women from becoming sureties.

The Poor and Fog Horns.

Shockney's bill to appoint a physician in each county, to attend the poor at the state's expense, made the atmosphere lukewarm when it was called up for third reading. One senator said "nobody done so much for nothing as doctors." "Except preachers," said the parson, who has been through the mill. It was finally decided that everybody, except reporters, were overworked and underpaid in this disappointing world.

Senator Hubbell played the role of parson for a time, and his brother senators tried to stir him up on rules, but he pounded the slab and wouldn't be "mixed."

The fee and salary bill came up in the Indiana house just long enough to be set for special order next Wednesday morning. If you want to see the dome of the state house totter, and maybe fall, you will be on hand when the economical element sets its machine to going that day and says mean things about the people being robbed. "Fog Horn" Kelley has placed his voice in the hands of a contractor and builder, who will give it a thorough overhauling for that gala day.

Rates for Taxes.

The house, after a long debate, adopted the report of the majority of the judiciary committee recommending the indefinite postponement of Mr. Erwin's bill giving grand juries jurisdiction only over cases of misdemeanors.

Mr. Trimble's resolution petioning congress to enact a law giving the people the right to vote for United States senators was referred to the committee on federal relations.

Mr. Oppenheim, of the ways and means committee reported H. R. 487 with a recommendation that it pass. The bill provides that all rates for taxes provided for by law shall be computed and extended by each county auditor on the assessor's valuation of property, as equalized by the county board and state board of equalization, or such other board as may be formed having the same duties as such boards of equalization, except as otherwise provided by law: Provided, however, all such taxes as may be from time to time assessed against the property of railroads, except such as are assessed for cities and towns, shall be denominated the "state general fund," and when collected shall be paid over by each county treasurer to the state treasurer to the state treasurer, at the times and in the manner now provided by law in the payment of moneys found due for state purposes, and when so paid in is to become a part of the general fund of the state.

Mr. Oppenheim explained the bill at length, saying that under its provisions

Mr. Oppenheim explained the bill at length, saying that under its provisions the counties would pay into the state treasury all money collected as tax from railroads, except such as is assessed for cities and towns, and this money would be available for state purposes. It was proposed to introduce a bill repealing the law which requires the counties to pay 12 cents on each $100 of valuation for state purposes, and the counties would thus be relieved of paying any state tax. He referred to the low valuation placed upon railroads, and said that they should be so taxed that they would pay into the treasury about $2,400,000; that this would pay the necessary expenses of the state and permit the establishment of a sinking fund. The measure was discussed pro and con for an hour when the bill was recommitted with instructions to add a clause repealing the law which now requires, etc., counties to pay into the state treasury 12 cents on each $100 of property valuation.

The bill was finally recommitted to the committee with instructions to amend it so as to make it repeal the law for a twelve-cent tax levy for state purposes.

Mr. Inman's bill making corporations liable for injuries received by employes through the negligence of co-employes, was then brought up for consideration.

New Bills in the Senate.

The following bills were introduced in the senate:

Mr. Ewing—Authorizing the issuing of executions in certain cases.

Mr. Ewing—That copies of all wills after being admitted to probate shall be filed in the recorder's office.

Mr. Griffith—Providing that any dealer in liquor convicted a second time of the offense of selling liquor on Sunday, election day or on a legal holiday shall forfeit his license.

Mr. Grose—That the legal rate of interest shall be fixed at six per cent, and that it shall be unlawful to charge over seven per cent.

Mr. Howard—Providing that no circuit judge shall be elegible as his own successor.

Mr. Magee—Prohibiting any corporation organized under the state law to transport natural gas beyond the limits of the state or connect its mains with those of any corporation that contemplates transporting gas outside of the state.

Mr. Magee—Making it the duty of the board of state charities to prepare rules for the selection of officers and persons to be employed in the benevolent institutions and to thereafter supervise the administration of the rules prepared. These rules are to provide for the classification of positions, for competitive examinations by which to test the fitness of applicants for positions, for promotions on the basis of merit, for a system of probation, for the transfer of officers or employes from one institution to another and for reports concerning the operation of the law. The board of state charities shall appoint local examining boards in localities where examinations are to be held, each such local board to consist of three persons, not more than one of whom shall be in the employ of the state and not more than two of the same political party. The secretary of the board of charities or some member of the board is required to be present at every examination. The board of charities shall grade the competitors in the various examinations in the respective classes for which they are examined and make lists of the same accordingly, ranging from the highest down, and shall rearrange such lists after each examination.

It is made the duty of the county commissioners in any county where an examination is to be held, to provide a place suitable for it. The board of charities is required to annually prepare and print a report of all proceedings and expenses under this act, and $3,000 is appropriated for the defrayment of such expenses. For any violation of the act the penalty is fixed at a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $1,000.

Mr. Griffith—Providing for the creation of a state pharmacy board, to consist of three members, to be appointed by the governor.

Mr. Harlan—Creating a board of pardons of four members, to be appointed by the governor, whose duty it shall be to consider all applications for pardons and reprieves, and make recommendations with reference thereto to the governor.

Mr. Loveland—Providing that county clerks, sheriffs and auditors shall be ineligible to second terms.

New Bills in the House.

Bills were introduced in the house as follows:

H. B. 528, by Mr. Kyle—To provide for the employment of physicians and surgeons for township poor, and granting to such poor the right to select their own doctor.

H. B. 531, by Mr. Kern—To authorize boards of county commissioners to make donations and receive subscriptions for the erection of soldiers' monuments and memorial halls.

H. B. 529, by Mr. Kyle—Regulating the sale of poisons and fixing penalties.

H. B. 526, by Mr. Doll—Amending the election law so that an elector who can not read may declare his choice of candidates to the poll clerks and judges.

Bills Engrossed.

The following senate bills were engrossed:

S. 158, by Mr. Hudson—Providing for the licensing of engineers, and the appointment of a state examiner of engineers.

S. 66, by Mr. Kerth—Amending an act concerning the organization of savings banks.

S. 103, by Mr. Kopelke—Providing for the acknowledgement and recording of deeds and conveyances executed in foreign countries.

S. 72, by Mr. McHugh—Authorizing common councils to redistrict and change the bonudry lines of wards, such wards to be composed of as nearly an equal number of voters as possible.

S. 28, by Mr. Howard—Providing for the creation of an appellate court to be composed of five judges, not more than three of whom shall be from one political party. This court shall have jurisdiction over appeals from the criminal, circuit, superior and justice courts.

S. 23, by Mr. Hayden—Prohibiting the admission as an inmate to the home for feeble minded youth any boy or girl over the age of sixteen years.

S. 370, by Mr. Morgan—Relieving Indiana lands from taxation.

H. R. 282, providing for the appointment of wives as guardians of insane husbands.

Curdled the Blood.

Some of the representatives are actually in favor of meeting on Sunday, so in love are they with trying to make law. The doorkeepers say the members go to the capitol building by seven o'clock Sunday mornings and spend the entire day at their desks, being afraid to go home for fear somebody will carry their seats away.

Speaker Jenks climbed up into the throne and announced prayer by Mr. Stone. The machine started in on bills that curdled the blood of the reporters, so exciting were the contests of the measures.

Henry U. Johnson, the lion of the last general assembly, visited the house in the afternoon, during the discussion of the city charter. He squirmed around in his chair uneasily and wore an expression on his face that said: "If you will give me just one swipe at this house I'll sweep off the earth with the representatives, and take 'em all out at once, too." The members who knew Henry were well aware that he could do it, and took especial pains to keep him out of the fray.

TREASURER-ELECT GALL.

A Popular Gentleman Who Will Be Inducted Into Office To-day.

INDIANAPOLIS, Feb. 10.—To-day State Treasurer Lemcke will resign the office he has so ably and honestly filled for two consecutive terms, and Albert Gall, the choice of the people at the recent election by more than 20,000 majority, will become treasurer of state in stead.

Mr. Gall needs no introduction. He has been identified with the business interests of this city for more than thirty years, and in that time he has built up an enviable reputation. He is a prominent member of the commercial club and board of trade, and he has been identified in all movements tending to the advancement of the welfare and general interest of the city. His reputation is not confined to local circles, however, but has spread in every part of the state as an example of successful business and executive ability.

He was born at Green Bay, Wis., in 1842, and his father removed to this city in 1847. While yet in his "teens" the youth went west to seek his fortunes and remained for some time in California. Returning in 1864, he at once took employment with the firm of J. & G. Krause, carpet and wall paper dealers. It was not long before his name was in the title of the firm as the successor to one of the Krauses. From that time his business success has been steady and assured.

Although repeatedly urged by his friends to allow his name to be used for office, he steadily declined until the last election, when he yielded to their importunity. He has been a life-long democrat, and ever since 1860 an earnest worker in the party ranks. He has been eminent commander of the Raper commandery, Knights Templar, and is also a member of several leading German societies.

His chief deputy will be Mr. John C. Shoemaker, of this city, for many years proprietor of the Sentinel of this city, while Clemens Kessing, of Greensburg, will act as assistant. John Sontag will be retained for some time as assistant in the office.

SOLDIER SHERMAN.

THE GREAT GENERAL TAKEN VERY ILL.

Became Worse Last Night—Under the Care of Two Physicians—His Daughter Summoned from Washington.

NEW YORK, Feb. 10.—1:10 A. M.—General W. T. Sherman, who has been ill for several days, was suddenly taken worse last night and is now under the care of two physicians. His daughter has been summoned home from Washington.

General Sherman had not been out of the house for several days, and the relapse coming at the venerable age of the old hero when he was quite week from prostration is regarded as making his condition extremely critical.

SHATTERED THE SHANTY.

Five Men Badly Injured by an Explosion of Dynamite.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Feb. 10.—A gang of blasters employed on the Air line division of the New York and New Haven railroad placed a piece of dynamite on the forge in their shanty to thaw out while they ate their dinners.

Shortly after there was an tremendous explosion, shattering the shanty and injuring all of the men.

The foreman, Chancellor L. Barbour, of Colchester, will lose the sight of both eyes, is badly cut about the head and may die.

Micheal Kelly, of Willimantic, face and head badly injured.

Daniel Sullivan, of Willimantic, slightly injured.

John Sullivan No. 2 (so called), of Willimantic, head badly injured and will probably lose one eye.

John Sullivan No. 3 (so called), of Willimantic, badly burned about the face and shoulders.

Stanley's Philanthrophy.

CLEVELAND, O., Feb. 10.—Major Pond, Henry M. Stanley's manager, has announced that Stanley has decided to give all the gifts which he has received from the crowned heads of Europe and other admirers to General Booth, of the salvation army, for the cause of helping the poor of London. These gifts are valued at nearly $500,000. They consist of pearls of rare value, gold cups, and kindred articles. A number of them were received from Queen Victoria.

Ingalls to Lecture for $1,000 a Night.

ATCHISON, Kas., Feb. 10.—It is stated that members of Senator Ingalls' family have said that the senator will return to Kansas soon after the fourth of March and rest for six months. Of the numerous business propositions which he has received he will probably accept the one that best suits his tastes, the lecture proposition. He will receive $1,000 a night and expenses will be paid. He is still to remain in politics.

Mrs. McCabe's Escape.

BROWNSVILLE, TEX., Feb. 10,—It is reported here that Mrs. McCabe, the murderess of County Judge Stein, of Hidalgo, whose sensational statements as to the occurrence that led to that crime have excited the sympathy of the people, has escaped from jail in Matamoras. She had been convicted of murder by the county court, but had not been sentenced. It is supposed her escape was brought through the connivance of the jail officials.

A Jail Delivery.

LIBERTY, Mo., Feb. 10.—The county jail was broken open at three o'clock in the morning, and Henry Smith, A. R. Smith and Albert Hiatt, charged with burglary and larceny, and Richard Williams, serving a sentence for assault and battery, escaped. Five others in the jail refused to take leave on account of the intense cold weather.

SIBERIAN STORY.

FOUR NEW ENGLAND SAILORS IN RUSSIAN DUNGEONS.

Terrible Tale of Cruelties Inflicted Upon Americans Imprisoned in the Coal Mines of the Czar—Yankee Blood Aroused.

BOSTON, Mass., Feb. 10.—The Herald prints the terrible story of the imprisonment of four New England sailors—one of them born in Boston—for two years and ten months in a Siberian coal mine. Their offense was poaching in Russian waters for seal and walrus. One American died, after starving upon rice soup and being eaten by vermin. This seems also to have been the fate of the twelve or fifteen Japanese who made up the rest of the crew. The first member of this little party to reach home after being is Captain Joseph W. Morris, of this city. He made one successful expedition to the islands in Behring sea, and then he tried it again with the schooner Helena, manned by four American and twenty-two Japanese sailors. F. C. Crocker, of Searsport, Me., was second mate, Buck Folger, of Nantucket, was third mate, and J. C. Golder, of Bath, was ship-keeper. The schooner made a successful run to the islands, secured a full cargo of skins, and was headed for Yokohoma when a Russian man-of-war overhauled her. Part of the crew were from the man-of-war, according to Captain Morris' story, The others were taken to Vladivostock, where they were kept under guard until after their trial. They were refused hotel and other accommodations, and had to live out of doors, sleeping nights in holes in the bank, lined with dry grass. After the trial, the evidence against them being given all in the Russian tongue and they not knowing a word of it, they were taken to the coal mines at Nicolaski, where they were sentenced

TO HARD LABOR FOR THREE YEARS,

says Captain Morris:

Our names were called one by one and each of us received from the interpreter a paper stating that each must dig and send up from the mine five car loads of coal a day.

If the stated amount of coal did not come up no rations would be sent down so that if any of us were sick we would have to starve to death. I was the first to go down, and I did not again see the light of day for two years and ten months. I was left in a pit

TWO HUNDRED FEET LONG AND ABOUT TWENTY WIDE.

The darkness was so intense that I was never able to see but a few feet in front of me. After I had been down a little while I saw a light at the other end of the pit. I at once went towards it, and there beheld one of the most woeful sights I ever saw in my life. It was a man six feet tall and built in proportion. He was covered with coal dust from head to foot, his clothes were in tatters and he looked like a fiend. The light that I had seen came from the

MINER'S LANTERN ON HIS HEAD.

On seeing me he let forth a savage yell, and came towards me rapidly, talking in Russian, to which I could only reply with a shake of the head. He then went back to his picking in disgust. To this man, who was a Polish political prisoner, Captain Morris was chained. The man was insane. He ate the captain's rations, and grew violent when his fellow-laborer remonstrated. One day the pair had a terrible fight in which the Pole was beaten, owing to his lack of skill and effects of his long confinement. After three months the Pole died. The captain was by that time

NEARLY STARVED AND WAS STRUCK

by a sudden idea of relief. Says he: "I thought if I could wheel the corpse from the vein of coal into the shaft, take it off there and dump my coal into the car, and work hard enough to do two men's work, I would get the rations sent down for both of us, and this I did for four days, sending both lanters up every night. At the end of that time I could not stand it any longer, and I decided to do my own work only. Thereafter, as I expected, rations came down for only one. At this time I think for several days for I can remember beating the corpse with my shovel. At the end of fifteen days, having had to lift and carry the fellow all the time, I began to feel weak from labor and sick from the stench of the putrefying body. What to do I did not know. But at last a fearful thought came to me. I took my shovel and cut the corpse through at the waist, removing the belt, thus by the only possible way freeing myself from the body, and placed the

MY REASON PARTIALLY LEFT ME.

on the car and sent them up on the next load of coal. On the next car down were hammer and cold chisel, which I divined was for the purpose of taking off my bands and chain. After the first year, Morris had only three cars of coal to send up, but this was worse than five, he thought, as he had so much the more time to think. He was sinking into a condition of despondency which threatened his mental balance, when he received news that

His Sentence Had Expired.

Crocker was released with him, he says, and he had an unverified report that Folger also survived. The story as Morris thus tells it is that of the most outrageous treatment to which an American citizen was ever subjected. It was early in September when the Helena was captured, and the trial of the officers and crew occurred the latter part of October. The men sentenced were six Americans and fifteen Japanese.

CONGRESSIONAL.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 10.—Senator Sherman spoke at length. He thought restrictions concerning importation of books should be removed and foreign publications admitted subject to customary duties.

The House.

After the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill had been defeated the house took up the legislative appropriation bill. The afternoon was spent in discussion of a proposed amendment allowing clerks to all members of congress.

INDIANA ITEMS.

J. W. Ritter, editor of the Syracuse Register, has mysteriously disappeared.

A vein of superior coal has been found on the farm of August Weincke, of Jackson county.

Martin Heaton, of Walesboro, has been arrested and fined for dynamiting fish in White river.

A company is being organized to pipe natural gas via Palestine and Acton to Greenwood.

A vein of coal four feet thick has been struck near Greenwood forty feet below the surface.

The Rev. George E. Swan, pastor of Grace cathedral, Indianapolis, tendered his resignation.

The jury trying the case of William Bass for murder at Bedford disagreed and was discharged.

A royal-looking golden eagle was recently captured by Alexander Sencamigar, of Plainfield.

Mrs. Watt Bowden, living one mile south of Greenwood, had her leg broken in two places while chasing some horses in the barn.

The wreck at Arlington was not as bad as reported, no one being injured and only three cars burned.

Buck Donnelly, after having been released from the penitentiary for three weeks, was arrested at New Castle for burglary.

More than one hundred accessions have been recently made to the Methodist church at Seymour, the result of the recent revival there.

The Hon. Stephen Harding is lying at the point of death at Milan. He was the territorial governor of Utah during Mr. Lincoln's administration.

The Hon. John T. Rankin, of Decatur county, has made an assignment. He made the race for congress last fall against the Hon. W. S. Holman.

The Wall Street Methodist church revival, at Jeffersonville, after three weeks continuance, closed with seventy accessions. Virgil W. Lewis is pastor.

Elizabeth Mullen, aged seventy-two walked out of a two-story window at Jeffersonville, while in a somnambulistic state, and was instantly killed by striking the pavement.

The swindler, calling himself Frank C. New, and claiming to represent the Indianapolis Journal, who was arrested at Seymour, has been identified as John C. Rose, of Ohio. He has been committed for grand jury action.

While boring for artesian water, at Greenwood, a vein of coal four feet thick was struck at a depth of forty-one feet. Shares are $50 but cannot be bought for $100, and $15,000 has been offered the company but it would not take $50,000 for its prospects.

GIBBS' GAME.

AN INDIANAPOLIS JEWELER IS PULLED IN NEW YORK.

Believed by Customs Officers of $2,000 Worth of Watches, etc., for Smuggling.

NEW YORK, Feb. 10.—Max Gibbs, an Indianapolis jeweler, who arrived on the German Lloyd steamship Ems in the morning, was relieved by custom officers of seven fine gold watches, a quaint silver watch, half a dozen pairs of undressed kid gloves and a half dozen gold finished fruit knives, the whole valued at $2,000, which he is charged with smuggling. Gibbs said that some time ago he went abroad, and brought back a quantity of watches and jewelry, but the duties consumed the profits. Then his brother-in law suggested that he bring in the next lot in his pocket, and omit the formality of paying custom duties. He is sorry he tried it.

Indian Pow Wow.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 10.—It was some time after one o'clock when the conference between the Sioux and the Indian commissioner was resumed. Little No Heart, of the Cheyenne reservation, was the first speaker, and he went over about the ground the others had done. He also said that they wanted civilians as agents and not military officers.

Lottery Letters Seized.

CAMDEN, N. J., Feb. 10.—Postmaster Browning made a third seizure of lottery letters, The lot numbers between two hundred and three hundred letters addressed to people in Camden. They contained circulars and instructions of a Mexican state lottery, of which W. Basseth is manager, and were mailed in the City of Mexico.

AN OHIO GIRL SUICIDES

Because Her Folks Kicked at Her Marriage Elopement.

FINDLAY, O., Feb. 10.—On Thursday Dinnie Monnett, the daughter of a wealthy farmer, eloped with Jud L. McClintock and was married at Covington, returning home Saturday. Last night she took aconite with suicidal intent and died. The cause was the refusal of her parents to sanction the marriage.

Commercial Congress.

TOPEKA, Kan., Feb. 10.—The senate took up for consideration and adopted by a unanimous vote the concurrent resolution introduced by Senator Kelly, of McPherson, providing for a commercial congress to consider the inerests of the agricultural west.

Skinned Alive.

NEW YORK, Feb. 10.—An Italian child, burned last week by pulling a pot of boiling water over itself, it is alleged, was treated with some ointment not prescribed by a physician, and was literally skinned alive by it, dying in terrible agony.

Yardmen's Strike.

HARTFORD, Conn., Feb. 10.—The yardmen of the New England road went out on strike because of reduction of wages from $2.50 to $1.25 per day. A blockade of freight in the yards exists as a result.

White Ribboners.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 10.—Next Sunday the great convocation of "White Ribboners," or devoted temperance women of the country will begin in this city.

No Senator Yet.

PIERRE, S. D., Feb. 10.—The ballot for United States senator at noon resulted: Moody, 13; Melville, 13; Trippe, 25; Campbell, 37.

NAME OF NEW.

AN INDIANIAN TO BE SECRETARY WINDOM'S SUCCESSOR.

An Old Hoosier Editor and Politician of National Fame to Have Charge of Uncle Sam's Money Bags.

NEW YORK, Feb. 10.—A gentlemen of more than local prominence who has long been indentified with public affairs and is reputed to be thoroughly informed regarding the inside work of the present administration and who has just returned from a visit to Washington said: "At 5 o'clock on Thursday afternoon last President Harrison called Gen. John C. New, consul-general at London, to come to Washington at once.

"It will be remembered that when President Harrison was making up his cabinet, Gen. New was very anxious to be appointed the secretary of the treasury. He had been treasurer and assistant secretary of the treasury and his ambition impelled him to seek the secretaryship. But his friends urged upon him that he could not afford to sacrifice the consul-generalship for the position of the secretary of the treasury. The consul-generalship would certainly yield him $35,000 annually, and, besides, would give many legitimate opportunities of increasing that sum. General New finally decided to accept the consul-generalship. Now it is believed he can afford to relinquish it.

"Unless General New decides that the handsome income from the consul-generalship, with its freedom from care, is better than the secretaryship, with its perplexities (leaving out the impulses of ambition), he will probably be the next secretary of the treasury.

"This is the settled opinion of those who are best informed of the president's purpose. It is known that Gen. New has studied the whole British question thoroughly from an international standpoint. As he is a man of great discretion and caution, besides thoroughly American, his views will be of the greatest importance to Mr. Harrison, who fully realizes this in all its breadth and significance, as he knows that he will want at his command the best, fullest and most accurate sources of information. This fact alone makes Gen. New the strongest possible candidate for secretary of the treasury."

MONDAY'S MARKET REPORTS.

Grain and Produce.

CHICAGO, Feb. 10.—Wheat—May, 97⅝c; July, 93¼c.

Corn—May, 52⅜c; July 52⅝c.

The Financial Situation.

NEW YORK, Feb. 10.—There was an active trade in stocks in the first hour of the morning, the total sales up to 11 o'clock being 76,700, of which Lackawanna, Union Pacific, St. Paul, Atchison and Reading furnished about one-half. The activity, however, did not result in much change of prices, and at 11 o'clock all of the most active stocks were either unchanged or ⅛ to ¼c higher than they closed on Saturday.

On Change.

CHICAGO, Feb. 10.—Wheat—Opened at Saturday's close, declined near close; rallied and closed just above Saturday's close.

Corn—Fluctuated considerably and closed irregular.

Oats—Close was steady at a slight decline.

Pork—Closed weak at the bottom.

Lard—Quite steady at a decline.

Ribs—Opened at a decline and closed steady at a reduction.

Live Stock Quotations.

CHICAGO, Feb. 10.—Hogs—Prices 10c lower. Sales ranged at $2.5@3.30 pigs, $3.25@3.50 light; $3.30@3.35 rough packing; $3.35@3.50 mixed, and $3.40@3.55 heavy packing and shipping lots.

Sheep—Quotations ranged at $3.50@5 westerns; $3.75@5.10 natives, and $4.75@5.90 lambs.

AN INCREASE

Of $57,000,000 of Circulating Paper Money in Five Months.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 10.—The purchases of silver at the rate of 4,500,000 per month since August 13 have resulted in a total output by the treasury of $28,804,000 of new United States treasury notes authorized by the act of July 14, 1890. Of this amount there were in the treasury on January 31, $3,702,294, thus leaving $25,101,706 outstanding, and being that much increase of the circulating medium. In the same time the amount of gold cirtificates in circulation, exclusive of those held in the treasury, has increased $31,456,916 to a total of $155,839,449. This increase of nearly $57,000,000 of circulating paper money in a little over five month may naturally be expected to have an influence on prices generally, but especially upon rates of interest, and consequently on the prices of interest and dividend paying securities.

HICCOUGHED FOR SIX WEEKS.

A Connecticut Girl Fast Wasting to a Skeleton.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Feb. 10.—Alice Woodward, about ten years old, of Shelton, has been hiccoughing incessantly for six weeks.

She is wasted to a skeleton, and death is but a question of a very few days. Even electricity has had no effect upon her.

DEMOCRATS MADE HAPPY.

The Rhode Island Supreme Court Decides in Their Favor.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Feb. 10.—The action of the grand committee of the general assembly, in ordering a new election for representative to congress in the Second congressional district, has been sustained by an opinion rendered by the supreme court.

The election will be held February 21.

A Railway Magnate Dead.

PITTSBURG, Feb. 10.—J. N. McCullough, first vice president of the Pennsylvania company's lines west of Pittsburg, and a central figure in railroad management for thirty years, died at his residence in Allegheny City at 9:35 a. m. of general debility.

AFTER MANY YEARS.

I believe it is true that Satan, out of sheer envy of happy lovers, spreads his snares to make them unhappy and even ruin their lives, I have my own love affair in view as an illustration.

I was quite a young man when I fell in love with Dolly Wheeler, the parson's daughter, and as both her parents and mine approved of the match it looked as if the course of love would run very smooth.

About a month after I had been engaged to Dolly I was introduced to a Miss Grey, a young lady who had run down from the city to summer in our town. She was the most arrant flirt imaginable, and it was not long before I found myself in the net she had so skillfully laid for me. Of course, I did not love her, but it gave me a guilty pleasure to think how I was hoodwinking Dolly all the time.

One night as I sat with Miss Grey in the twilight I kissed her, and, as fate would have it, who should enter the room at that moment but Dolly, who saw it all. The next day she sent my ring back and broke the engagement.

The next week I left home and went away to sea, Some one had told me that Dolly was going to marry Ike Robins.

Mother wrote me often; she never mentioned Dolly, and I never asked about her. I lived with men, generally on the sea, and had no thought of liking or caring for any woman. I always intended to go home and see the old folks, but they died of a fever within two days of each other, and a stranger sent me the news.

Lawyer Dredger saw to the estate, and did what I asked him to do with the money. I did not need it then, but it would keep me from being a beggar in my old age. And still I sailed the sea, until at forty years old an accident happened to me which came near being my death. It did not kill me or cripple me, but I was no longer fit for a sailor's life and there was nothing left for me but to settle down on land and live on my money; and so I went home at last to talk to Lawyer Dredger, and get his advice,

I felt very sad as I walked through the village. My parents were dead, no one remembered me; I had not a friend in the place.

The lawyer had done his best to make my money profitable to me, and I was richer than I dreamed. When all the business was over, I took a moonlight stroll through the street. It was twenty years since the night I kissed Sally Grey, and lost my love by it: but nothing had altered in the outward aspect of the place,

People were sitting on their porches as of yore; the same flowers seemed to bloom in the gardens; the same loungers to stand about the tavern door; the same young men and girls to hang on the garden gates. It was odd to think that the girls might be daughters of those I knew.

There stood the church; the parsonage. I walked toward it. The windows of the sitting-room were open. I drew softly near and peeped in.

The old clock ticked in the corner. The rag carpet was either the same or another just like it. There was only one blue vase on the mantel. I suppose the other had been broken; but there were the profiles of Grandma and Grandpa Wheeler over the escritoire.

There was Dominie Wheeler, looking very much older, sitting exactly as he used to sit beside the table, his red handkerchief over his knees, a cup of tea in his hands.

"Dolly," he said.

And from an inner room came a woman, large, handsome, and high-colored who said:

"Well, father?"

Could it be my slim young Dolly?

Yes, it was. She was very fine looking now, and she looked so matronly that I immediately concluded that she was Mrs. Isaac Robins.

Still, I could not leave the window.

"It is my one glimpse of her." I said to myself, "for years past and for years to come."

"Well, father?" she said, turning smilingly toward him.

"I have been thinking it over, Dolly," he said. "I think it would be best for you to marry. I am eighty. I cannot live long. You had better marry Mr. Braham. He is very fond of you and you like him, I am sure. Is it for my sake you say no?"

She bent over him and put her hands on his shoulders.

"Father," she said, "I am going to tell the truth, a thing a woman seldom does in these matters. I should not have to leave you, so it is not for your sake, much as I love you. But I do not care for Mr. Braham. I have only cared for one man in my life—my first love, James Gardner. I sent him away from me and he had done very wrong; but I think now that we both loved each other. I know that, even now, I cannot forget him, and that I shall never forget him while I live."

There were tears in her eyes; she brushed them away. In another moment I was at the door; she opened it. I held out both my hands. Those were Dolly's girlish eyes that looked at me, and I caught her in my arms

"I have come back to be forgiven, Dolly," I said, and I saw that I had not come in vain.

Found Her Out.

Nora—Av ye plaze, mim, Oi kim tee give ye warnin Oi'm goin' ter lave ye at th' end o' th' munt.

Mistress—Why, what's amiss; Nora?

Nora—Ye sir a decaving liddy, mim Oi giv yer distinchly ter conderstand Oi nivir wurruked out save in th' bist fam'lies, an' Oi dont see yer name in Foos Hoondrid at all, mim."

The White House Cat.

There is a yellow-haired, tailless cat that haunts the White house corridors. They call it Dan, and many regard it as the President's mascot. There was a yellow dog that used to follow Gen. Garfield wherever he went, out of gratitude for a bone that the President once threw him when he was on the verge of starvation in the street.

THE PROTECTION TOURNEY.

Shall Two Million Farmers be Drawn From the Land.

T. E. Wilson, in New York World.

In a recent article in the Tribune Mr. Roswell G. Horr says: "What we need today in this country is not more farmers but more factories." He has just previously remarked: "The crops of the farmer are his wages." As the product of the factory machines are only one-fifth wages, and the profit of the machines over and above sustaining life on a few machine tenders goes to the few factory-owners whose special advocate he is, Mr. Horr naturally desires to see the wages of the farmer taken from him and given to the mill owners. We have 2,000,000 farmers in excess of the number required to supply us with food, and these raise a yearly surplus worth $600,000,000 when exchanged for $450,000,000 worth of factory and $150,000,000 worth of tropical products brought to this country. Mr. Horr is naturally disgusted at our getting $450,000,000 worth of factory goods by farm labor, every cent of which is farm wages, and not one cent of which represents the profits of a machine. Naturally he wants to "draw away from farming some of the people engaged in that business and put them" into protected mills where a large portion of their present wages will go to the mill owners.

"Do not lose sight of this fact," Mr. Horr tells the buncoed readers of the Tribune, "No country ever became rich and prosperous on agriculture alone." He might truthfully have added, "No man ever lived for a week on food alone." He would die without drink. No agricultural country ever failed to become rich and powerful if it had large trade and commerce by which its farm products—all wages—were exchanged for manufactures which were only one fifth wages. Riches come by trading and exchanging. No nation ever was rich that did not trade and exchange its products for those of other nations. Mr. Horr advocates the Asiatic policy of limiting trade to exchanges between the people of this country.

When after over a thousand years of Protection the nations of Europe broke through the Protection wall surrounding India they found 200,000 of the richest people in the world and 200,000,000 of the poorest. Mr. Hoar wishes to bring about the same condition of affairs in this country, and the first step is to take from 2,000,000 surplus farmers, now self-supporting the $450,000,000 additional wages they receive from Europeans and require them to support themselves and be satisfied with the $80,000,000 total wages they would receive for making the same goods in factories, where the profit would go to the lord of the of the mill. As the food they now raise for their own consumption is worth twice if not three times their total factory wages, Mr. Horr now wishes to deprive them of every cent they now receive from abroad and put from one-half to two-thirds of them in the county poorhouses. Readers of The World who have missed his argument that this would be a good thing for the farmers are to be condoled with.

Mr. Horr was hired last spring by the League of Protective Mill Owners to travel through the State of New York and "fool the farmers" on the subject of the tariff. His pet illustration was cut nails, knowing, no man better, that cut nails were a yankee invention at the beginning of this century; that between 1820 and 1860 their manufacture was one of the chief industries of five States; that we made the cut nail machines used abroad and also exported enormous quantities of cut nails, he had the impudence to tell the credulous Republican farmers who assembled at the county fairs to listen to him:

What did you pay for nails before 1861? Nails were on the free list and the were $6 a keg. We put a tariff of $2 a keg on nails. No one had then been made in this country—not a nail. Then it would be expected that nails would be $8 a keg, but they went down to $5 the next year, then down to $3, and so on, until today we can get nails at $2 40 a keg.

It is not to be wondered at that a man with such a nerve should be employed by the Tribune to "fool the farmers" who read it. It is required in the present crisis. But how much longer can the readers of the Tribune be fooled on this tariff question? Even though they read nothing else and refuse to listen to any argument, they cannot have their attention drawn to the subject week after week without some thinking for themselves. The moment they think, they are no longer Protectionists. Mr. Horr's work cannot fail in the end to make for Tariff Reform, for it reaches to disgust those who would listen to no one else.

In selecting a successor to the late Secretary Windom the president will have a difficult job to find a man who will please the Wall Street bankers and the western Republicans.

SAM JONES, after whipping the mayor of Palestine, Texas, has gone to New York, perhaps to tackle larger subjects. He may not meet his match until he reaches Boston, or some other place.

CLEAR CREEK.

Rev. Bridge,is holding a protracted meeting at Bippus.

The young folks prayer meeting at Makin is quite a success.

The parlor of Mrs. Finkenbiner's was well lighted Sunday evening.

Mrs. F. J. Emley, was on the sick list last week but is some better.

Mr. Ike Davis who was on the sick list last week is able to be around.

A new boy came to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Mart Henline on Wednesday night.

Quite a racket occurred between Effa Code and Stella Frank's, on Friday but no body was hurt.

Mr. Ora Heiser has a new buggy but he says he is not going to use it till the roads get better. "Look out girls."

The exhibition at No. 9 last Thursday night was a grand one. There was a large crowd there and all the young people enjoyed themselves.

Wanted.

Everybody to know that the Huntington County Loan and Savings Association is strictly a home institution.

We want you to become a member,

You can't lose a dollar.

You can withdraw at any time.

Now is the time to commence to lay by a little for a rainy day.

You can carry at least one share at a saving of 70 cents a mont' and in 6½ years you will have $100 that will be just like finding it.

Try it and see.

RELIGIOUS TOPICS.

The London Religious Tract Society last year issued 77,000,000 publications.

The "oldest clergyman of England," the Rev. John Elliott, died Jan. 29 in his hundredth year.

The twelfth triennial conference of the Young Men's Christian Association of all lands is to be held next August in Amsterdam, Holland.

Miss Cusack, the nun of Kenmare, has joined the Baptists, and was baptized recently by the Rev. Dr. R. S. MacArthur of the Calvary Church in New York.

The American Congregational Union reports last year as the most prosperous one in its history. Its income was $155,530, $76,300 of which came from churches and individuals.

Mme. Koucher, the wife of the great minister of the second empire, who died in Paris Christmas day, expired on her knees before a crucifix.

The holy father's alms to the poor and various good works during the past year amounted to upward of 400,000 francs, including 45,000 francs to the poor of Rome.

The will of the late Emma Abbott, the opera singer, leaves a large portion of her extensive estate to charities, among them being the foundling asylum of the Sisters of Charity in New York.

A bust of the Capuchin missionary, Cardinal Massaia, has been placed in the great hall of the Propaganda at Rome. A replica of this bust has been ordered by the Italian Geographical society for its place of meeting.

The German government has proposed a new plan for the settlement of the Catholics for salaries for priests and bishops and other sums belonging to the ecclesiastical budget, the payment of which was suspended during the kulturkampf. The result will probably be that several millions of marks will be placed at the disposal of the German episcopate.

Bishop Bowman of St. Louis has passed more than fifty years in church work. He is now 74 years old and and is in splendid health, straight as an arrow, with a constitution like flint. He says that his first two appearances before an audience were flat failures. He broke down completely, but on his third attempt he came off with flying colors, and has never since been disconcerted when in the pulpit.

Owing to the final decree made by Judge Hawkins in the Orphans' court, Pittsburg, authorizing the payment of a large number of bequests made by the late William Thaw, the following are among others to be paid at once: House of Little Sisters of the Poor, Alleghany City, $1,000; Mercy Hospital, $30,000; Home of Good Shepherd, $1,000: and Little Sisters of the Poor, Penn avenue, $3,000.

A recent count shows that the Christian Endeavor movement began the new year 1891 with 18,000 societies and at least 770,000 members. This is a gain of 110,000 members in six months, by far the largest in the history of the movement. The northernmost society, so far as is known, is one in the Northern Light Presbyterian church in Juneau, Alaska. The southwesternmost societies are in National City, Cal., where Christian Endeavor societies have just been formed in the Presbyterian, Baptist, and Congregational churches.

THEY SAY.

That "society men" are not the most popular.

That long skirts for street wear are scavengers.

That some persons' diamonds are pure Parisian paste.

That domestic jealousy is not for exhibition to the public.

That not all the men who are not in jail ought't to be.

That women who want to be club fellows are not equal to it.

That economy is a good thing to practice when money is plenty.

That it is not a difficult matter to get into the swim if you know.

That the prettiest girl in society is not always the best type of woman.

That some folks who are in society wouldn't be in it if they were not rich.

That marrying a title is a better advertisement than marrying a man.

That husbands and wives should settle disagreeable differences at home.

That there are a good many drug-store complexions visible at an evening reception.

That because a man is a Congressman is no reason why he should not be a gentleman.

That there are more Dr. Jekylls and Mr. Hydes in daily life than one would suspect.

That a full church does not alway indicate an improved moral condition in the community.

The people in theater-boxes do not always turn their good mannered side to the audience.

That a rich young man will have to be a very "tough citizen" before he is no longer eligible to social honors.

CAUSE AND EFFECT.

Cowboys and calvarymen are usually bowlegged from sitting astride a horse so constantly.

The right arm of a blacksmith, from constant use, is almost hypertropaled, while the left arm, from disuse, becomes atrophied.

A shoe maker is almost always round-shouldered from continually bending over the last between his knees as he sews and hammers.

The head of a brick-layers' laborer is held aloft from his habit of carrying a hod on his shoulders and looking above him as he climbs up the scaffold.

A carpenter's right shoulder is almost invariable higher than his left, in consequence of having to use his right arm all the time in planing and hammering. With every shaving his shoulder rises with a jerk, and it finally becomes natural for him to hold himself in that way.

All good orators have most abnormally wide mouths. This is the direct consequence of using sonorous words and speaking with deliberation and correct pronunciation. If one practices this before the glass one can see that the muscles in the cheeks are stretched more than ordinarily and the mouth is extended a great deal more than in every-day conversation.

This Will Defeat the Wildest Horse.

A new operating table for veterinary surgeons is so made that the top of it can be moved by a powerful crank, and be made to stand on edge on the floor at the side of the table. The animal is led alongside and, while standing on its feet, is firmly lashed to the top, which is then tilted into place again.

WITH PLAYS AND PLAYERS.

Herrmann, the magician, is considering an offer to delight London and Paris.

Modjeska will have a new piece next season on the subject of "Marie Antoinette."

Henry Irving is quoted as saying that he has no intention of visiting America for some years to come.

They say that audiences in the Bowery, New York, won't tolerate skirt dancing. They think it a little too gay.

Charles Frohman is to manage a new theatre in Boston to be built by Rich & Harris, which will have its initial opening Sept. 21.

A New York photographer has sold more than 1,000 photographers of Lillian Russell as she is seen in "Poor Jonathan," and nearly 500 of Ada Rehan in "The Last Word."

Nothing in history shows more distinctly the at once fierce and fantastic nature of the Frenchman than the recent popular commotion over Sardou's mild play, "Thermidor."

A man of speculative turn whose name is Rosenberg has threatened a suit for $50,000 against a Buffalo paper for criticising his wife's performance in a nude French play.

The leading dramatic agents of New York have made an agreement whereby each promises not to secure an engagement for any actor who has failed to pay for services rendered by another.

Sol Smith Russell has in preparation a new play which, while historical in character, will have an excellent comedy part that will fit him admirably.

Rose Coghlan and Lydia Thompson met by chance at a hotel table in Albany the other week, and to the surprise of some observers fell to exchanging reminiscences in a very sociable way. During their talk the fact was developed to an interested few that Miss Coghlan came to this country from England when a girl, with Miss Thompson, playing a subordinate part in a company under the management of the latter.

A Paris correspondent says of Sardou, the great French dramatist: "Sardou is not popular. He has few friends. The only way to gain his favor is to feed him with flattery. His wonderful success has transformed the timid, hard-working writer of other days into a colossal egotist. In manner he is brusque and dictatorial. All the artists at the theater are afraid of him, for he is the most arduous of taskmasters during a rehearsal. Only the 'divine Sarah' can tame this dramatic bear. She goes to him for ideas, but she doesn't allow him to order her around."

It seems, says the New York Sun, that the jokes about matronliness in ballets are not unfounded. A troupe now engaged in a city theater actually contains three members whose relationship is those of grandmother, mother and daughter. The statement is more of a shock, however, than the sight of these three graces. The grandmother is a year or two under 50, and a graceful, supple woman yet, with a face whose lines of age can readily be smoothed over with the chalk and rogue of imitation youth. She looks no more than 60 per cent of her years. The mother is 30 and the granddaughter only 14. There is a strong family resemblance in the trio, not only facially, but because they are almost precisely the same size and shape. One of their contributions to the entertainment is a skirt dance, and in the play bill they are declared to be sisters. It may be worth a record, moreover, that grandma can kick higher than either of her descendants.

FROM BEYOND SEA.

The Irish-Australians seem pretty unanimous in condemnation of Parnell.

The income of Lord Revelstoke, the head of the House of Baring, will not in future exceed £3,000 a year. It was once more than £40,0000.

On the Duke of Orleans' recent trip he took 400 photographs, which, upon development, showed 300 blank and fifty unrecognizable scenes.

The British Balloon society has entered a sturdy protest against the threatened choice of Jerusalem as the prime meridian of the world.

Mr. Henley, aged 95, finished an uninterrupted life of pauperism in the Gosport (England) workhouse. He was brought there when 6 years old, in 1801.

The new Archbishop of York, Dr. Magee, formerly Bishop of Peterborough, is the first Irishman who has ever become a prelate of England.

The London Vegetarian Society reports a membership of 541, but the movement is said to have spread throughout England, Europe and the colonies.

Official Russian bulletins now being issued assert that the number of German colonists within the empire has become dangerous. In one province they form 16 per cent of the population.

Aubrey Boucicault, son of Dion Boucicault, who is just about to be married, has written a new play expressly for his mother, in which Mrs. Boucicault will appear with her daughter Nina and the author.

Two hundred thousand dollars a year is spent by the London school board enforcing the attendance of children. They are advised to try the French plan of getting children to school by good lunches.

At an open-air meeting of the unemployed in the east end, London, a speaker who had worked in Gen. Booth's workshops denounced the general as a "sweater" pure and simple. He had discharged men earning 6½ pence an hour to make room tor those who would work for 3 pence an hour.

The late chief rabbi of London's "Ethical Will," published in the Jewish Chronicle, continues this exhortation: "Whatever be your calling, continue to shun, oh, my dear ones, as I know you do, every kind of usury, for usury still constitutes, alas! the malignant canker which eats into the vitality of the house of Israel."

ODD ITEMS.

A $100,000 staircase is to be put into Mrs. Bonanza Mackay's new London house.

In fashionable marriage notices in some newspapers the name of the bride precedes that of the bridegroom.

The constitution of the new state of Washington limits the session of the legislature to sixty consecutive days.

Two Portuguese pugilists recently engaged in a prize-fight of 1,127 rounds. They fought six hours a day, stopping at noon to eat and smoke.

Dearborn county, Indiana, has a 12-year-old boy with feet fifteen inches in length. He is called "professor" because of the solidity of his understanding.

NOTES ABOUT NOTABLES.

Professor Newman, brother of the late cardinal, is hale and hearty at 85. He is a vegetarian.

Charles Stuart Kennedy, of Detroit, possesses a contemporary miniature of Mary Queen of Scots, painted on porcelain, and her autograph.

Edison is said to regard his deafness as a blessing. It enables him to think and plan in perfect quiet and to have the children about him at all times without being disturbed by their noise.

Lieutenant Commander Berry, who had command of the expedition sent out to relieve the Arctic explorer De Long, is now stationed at Memphis in charge of the light house district.

"Buck" Kilgore, the Texas Congressman who kicked a door open in the Capitol last fall, has had a shoe named after him that sells famously down in the Lone Star State.

Elias Howe, Jr., who was worth $1,000,000, was the richest private who served in the war. He enlisted in Bridgeport, Conn., in 1862. At one time, when supplies were low, he paid the two months' pay of his entire company.

Captain John McElwin, of the New York police department, has been retired on his own application, after nearly thirty years' service on the force. His pension will be $1,325, or about half pay.

Dr. J. H. Gallinger, who has been elected United States Senator from New Hampshire, was a compositor on the Commercial Gazette twenty-five years ago, and studied medicine in the intervals of his labors at the case.

Mr. Edison, in a speech to the employes of the Ogden iron mines at Dover, N. J., said: "Boys, wait until next winter and we shall have no snow to bother us upon this hill. During the coming year I shall invent electric and sunlight reflectors that will melt the snow as fast as it falls."

The portrait that is to adorn the two-dollar Treasury note that the Treasury department is about to issue is that of Gen. C. B. McPherson, who was killed at Atlanta shortly before Sherman began his march to the sea.

President Charles K. Adams of Cornell university has just returned from Europe and says, after a month's study of the Oxford and Cambridge universities, that they are not as well adapted to the needs of England as our colleges are to the needs of America.

Jay Gould's daily income is said to be about $7,500. But this is rather small compared to Rockefeller, who is supposed to receive $18,000 daily, or Astor, who gets $23,000 daily, or even Cornelius Vanderbilt, who has to get along with $15,000 for every twenty-four hours.

Although Mr. Justice Brown and his wife have no children of their own they are fond of young people, for whom their home in Detroit was a famous headquarters. It is believed that their house in Washington will be a famous resort for such society.

Unless Dr. Bors, a Hungarian physician is oversanguine about his diphtheria discovery, his name may yet become almost as famous as Dr. Koch's. It is reported that during a recent epidemic of this disease only 2½ per cent of his patients died, while in other cases of practicing physicians the mortality reached 75 per cent.

The late Gen. Spinner was a hunter, fisherman, trapper, botanist and naturalist, and could always give a good reason except in the case of a frog. He firmly believed that the creature's fore legs ought to have been made the longer and could show wherein such a thing would have been a great advantage.

The oldest undertaker in Paris has just died at the age of eighty-two. During the latter years of his life he was too feeble to attend funerals, so the Pompers Funebres Company made him manager of their chief coffin depot, where he would sit all day in a large padded coffin which served as an arm chair.

John D. Rockefeller, the Standard Oil king, is of Pennsylvania Dutch descent, and his face shows the heavy lines and prominent nose that are characteristic of that ancestry. He is a quiet, retiring man, wholly unassuming in dress and manner, and always speaks in low, well-modulated tones. His home life is noted for its simplicity.

Sir Charles Dilke has accepted an invitation from the Society d'Etudes Sociales et Politiques to lecture in Brussels in the French tongue on the position of the working classes in the British colonies. No doubt but they will get a good address. He is under a cloud, but he is an able man, and at this time the liberals have sorely felt the need of him.

Speaking of Stanley's influence among the natives, E. J. Glave, who was with the explorer in Africa, says that once a white man was describing to a black boy heaven and the other place. The black boy asked his informant to tell him where Stanley would go at the end of his earthly career. The white man thought the issue a delicate one and did not pronounce it. "Well," said the African, "wherever he goes he'll be a big chief."

The Marshal Ney myth, so dear to North Carolinans until it was smothered under the weight of evidence, is again revived and seriously advanced by Rev. James A. Weston, an Episcopal clergyman of Hickory, N. C. He is firmly convinced that Peter Stuart Ney, the drunken schoolmaster who died in North Carolina forty-five years ago, was the veritable marshal of France whose execution is minutely described by Vaulabelle, Bourrienne and Mombalon. Convinced himself, the clergyman has written and published a book to convince others that Stuart and Michael were one and the same.

George Gould is growing stout. His cheeks begin to hang down below the line of the jawbone, and the girth of his waistband is longer than the circumference of his chest. At a rough guess he must weigh at least thirty pounds more than his father, though he is himself very short in stature. For a time he was rather an eager student of athletics. At one time he was a constant attendant at the New York Athletic Club gymnasium, where he gained some proficiency in dumb-bell, Indian club and horizontal bar work. He practiced running on the central track and developed considerable endurance, though he did not attain any particular speed as a sprinter. He has given up his exercise entirely, and the result is an accumulation of weight.

WITTY SNAP SHOTS.

Plain goods become figured when they are marked down.

If an active young man is very bright he cannot keep it dark.

A row at a meeting of clergymen is not, strictly speaking, a pastoral scene.

"Are we losing our eyes" ask the scientists. Suppose we wait and see.

FEMININE CHAT.

Miss Mary Garret, of Baltimore, has a bath in her home lined with onyx that cost $6,000.

Mrs. Blaine is the tallest of the ladies of the Cabinet, and Mrs. Noble is the shortest, the latter being only five feet in height.

Queen Victoria, when dining alone, drinks very weak whisky and water. This is in accordance with her doctor's orders, but at banquets she takes two glasses of Burgundy.

Anroe Brown claims the distinction of being the largest woman in Georgia. She is forty-seven years old and lives in Houston county. She is 5 feet 8 inches in height and weighs over 500 pounds.

Charlotte Scoll, the colored woman who contributed the first $5 paid toward a monument for Abraham Lincoln in Washington, and whose name is on that account inscribed in bronze on the bottom of it, is dead.

Comtesse de Mailly-Nesle, one of the prettiest of Parisian women, is a blonde, with an elegant figure and a queenly carriage. Her hair is of a liquid gold, her eyes are blue and she is an accomplished artist and murician.

Lady Londonderry, wife of the ex-Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, is considered one of the handsomest women in England, though her face lacks expression. Her husband is a prominent turfman and keeps a large racing stud at Winyard.

Mrs. Carrie Steele, colored, has founded a colored orphan asylum in Georgia. She has built a cottage and stable, a larger building is going up, and four acres of land around it have already been put under cultivation. Mrs. Steele has collected the money entirely by her personal efforts.

Vinnie Ream Hoxie, the sculptress, is a very little woman, who has been compared to "a little brown sparrow fluttering in the sunlight." She is quite short in stature, and her hands are infinitely small and delicate. Her face is brown, her eyes dark and vigorous, and her wide forehead is almost covered with a few bangs. She is an emotional little creature with an alternate tear and smile in her eyes.

In a letter describing an audience at the vatican Miss Madeline Kerens, of St. Louis writes: "Mgr. Delle Valpe informed his Holiness that papa was a friend of the President of the United States. His holiness said, apparently as if in doubt: 'Mr. Harrison is President now, is he not?' Then, as if he knew whereof he spoke, he continued: 'Mr. Cleveland was before him,' and continuing, he inquired: 'Do you know Mr. Blaine, the great minister?'"

A FEW STATISTICS.

It is claimed that it will require 3,780 cars tomove the orange crop of Southern California this season. The value of the crop is estimated at $2,608,000.

Statistics show that one-fifth of the native married women of Massachusetts are childless It is said that in no country save France can a similiar condition of affairs be found.

INDIAN JUGGLERY.

A Conjurer Calls a Nest of Snakes from a Living Room.

A correspondent relates a conversation with a conjurer who had traveled through India making a study of the famous tricks of Indian jugglers. Many of their performances were easily seen through, according to his account, but he confessed himself posed by their snake charming feats.

A fellow came into my room and said: "Plenty big snake here, sahib. Plenty big snake in room."

I told him to go off—that I'd seen all his snake tricks and didn't want to be bothered. But he insisted there were plenty of snakes in the room, and finally I told him that he might come in and call them out.

He stood up in the middle of the floor and began to play on a sort of flute. Now, mind you, there was no furniture in the apartment but a cot bed and two or three chairs. He had not played two minutes before I saw the sheet on the bed rise up till it looked like a small tent, and then on enormous cobra crawled out and coiled itself on the floor, with its head erect and its tongue darting out in great anger.

The next moment I saw other serpents approaching from the corners of the room and placing themselves alongside their companion. The fakir, still playing on his flute, led the way to the door, and the snakes followed him. He paused on the threshold, and they reared their heads and hissed at him.

Just as I was beginning to get nervous another fakir crpt up behind them and cut their heads off with a sharp sword.

A FEMALE CRUSOE.

A Woman Left Alone on an Uninhabited Island for Fifteen Years.

The recent explorations on the Island of San Clement, which is due west from Del Mar, this county, but sixty miles, says the San Francisco Chronicle, has aroused interest in the history of the other islands of the coast. The Santa Barbara islands in the early part of the present century were inhabited by Indians of comparative white complexions who spoke a peculiar language. They were supposed to be decendents of the Aztec race of historic fame. There is no record of how these people came to be upon the islands or when they first settled there, but it is probable that the islands were inhabited by them before the founding of the California missions by the Franciscan friars.

Otter, seal foxes, and fishes were to be found in abundance on the islands and in the adjacent waters, and upon these the natives subsisted, using the flesh for food, the skins for clothing and tents, and the bones for making hunting implements. According to tradition Indians from the Alaskan islands frequently made trips to the Santa Barbara islands for the purpose of hunting. During one of these visits the Alaskans fell upon the naives, killing all the males, and after hunting for some time they left for the north, abandoning the women to their fate. The mission fathers, learning of the fate of the women, determined to have them removed to the mainland and for this purpose engaged a schooner. Upon arriving at the island San Nicholas the men proceeded to remove the women and such few personal effects as they had to the boat. When this had been accomplished and all were ready for embarking one of the women made a sign that she had forgotten her child and started back after it.

While she was gone a severe wind sprang up, which soon increased to a gale and compelled the little schooner to put to sea for safety. As the wind kept up for several days the captain ran into San Pedro, intending to return for the woman who had been left. At San Pedro the Indians were disembarked and taken to the missions at Los Angeles and San Gabriel, where they were cared for. From San Pedro the schooner sailed to Santa Barbara, and from there to Monterey, where she had been ordered. Thus was the poor woman left upon a bleak island out in the broad expanse of the great Pacific, with no companions save the wild wolf and the Indian dog, with which the island was infested. The news of the woman having been left behind spread rapidly, but no further effort was made to rescue her. The natural supposition was that she had perished, and in the course of a few years the subject had passed from the people.

In 1851, just fifteen years later, a hunter named Nidever and a couple of companions visited the island of San Nicolas and were astonished to find indications which led them to believe the woman was still alive. Footprints which had been made in the previous rainy season were to be seen in the now dry and hard soil, and from the size and general appearance the hunters concluded they had been made by a woman. Some small circular inclosures made of brush were also discovered, and in them some dried seal's blubber. Further than this the huts gave no indication of having been inhabited for some time. A strong wind arising the party put to sea without making any further discoveries. The next winter, 1852, Nidever again visited the island, and upon arriving immediately landed and searched for fresh signs of the woman. The huts discovered on the first trip were unchanged, but the seal blubber seemed to have been replenished by a fresh lot. Some wild dogs were found in the vicinity and the hunters thought it likely the woman had fallen a prey to these beasts, as they were quite ferocious.

In 1853 the same party planned another expedition for the purpose of hunting and making one more attempt to settle the question as to whether the woman was still alive. They searched about the island for some time, and were about despairing of success when one who had become separated from the rest discovered an object some distance away, and upon approaching it he found it to be the long-looked-for woman. He at once signaled the others and directed them to approach her from different directions in order to prevent her escape should she be so disposed. The men succeeded in getting quite close to her before they were discovered. Instead of showing signs of alarm as they expected, the woman appeared quite pleased to see them, and received them with a smile which indicated that she was not in the least afraid. The hunters assisted her to remove such articles of clothing and food to the boats as she was not disposed to leave behind. In the course of a few days she had become at home in the boat and helped in whatever way she could in the work aboard. After a month's hunting the party sailed to Santa Barbara, where the woman was regarded with wonder and curiosity. The people treated her with the greatest kindness and consideration. She was taken to the families of her rescurers, where she remained until her death, which occurred in a few years from overeating fruit, of which she was very fond.

The White House Nursery.

If one might accept the frequent newspaper mention of the McKee babies and the Russell Harrison babies as bearing any relation to the new deal at Washington one might be pardoned for remarking that we are to have a great infant administration. Let us repudiate immediately this too prevalent impression that the new administration is to be a nursery for anything but great principles, great policies, and great men.

NEW FANCIES IN SUITINGS.

The continued demand for quiet effects has continued among the designers of the finer goods in outing fabrics. Some of the most expensive tennis suitings are in combinations far removed from the garish reds, blues, and yellows worn by the 400,000 last season.

The Covert coat will appear in the spring cut straight down; full in envelopment without shaping, and be only in the light tan colors associated with its name. It will be about six inches longer, however, than the regulation Covert, and will be one of the palpably fashionable top coats of the mild season.

The Scotch will be shown in what is known as the "invisible plaid" patterns, in angoras, in various shades of tan and brown. There will also be many of those two-color diagonal weaves in gray and white, gray and brown, gray and black, and gray and blue, that will make up in an effect striking for richness and quietude.

The newer fancies in suitings are "as old as the hills." They are in the Scotch effects that have not been used for some years, though always in the repertoire of the high-class stocks. The grays, gray-blues and other similar tones last year the novelties will this year appear in variations upon last season's patterns and be the seaples of the line.

The dark, rough-faced, light-weight overcoats will be made slightly longer. Indeed, the tendency toward increasing the length of coats has been going on steadily—almost imperceptibly for several years past. It has affected the overcoats, frock-coats, and sack-coats. A sack-coat of three years ago, coming down barely to the middle line of the hips, compared with the long sack of this coming spring, extending well below the hips, would verify that while the lengthening may have been gradual it is marked. The sack-coats will be one and a half inches longer than last spring.

In trousers there will be a trifle more of distinctiveness in patterns among the regular lines. There are, however, some big plaids in black and white with lines of red or blue or yellow tracery parmeating the design that will be made up in trousers to be worn with the mixed suits. By mixed suits, of which will be a more general affectation than ever, is meant where the trousers and waistcoat are different according to the range of fancy of the wearer, and tempered into an ensemble of requisite quietude by the regulation black cutaway coat.
