

Salem Weekly Review.

VOL. II. NO. 13.

SALEM, N. Y., SATURDAY, MARCH 1, 1879.

PRICE THREE CENTS.
$1.00 Per Year.

HELP.

My hands have often been weary hands, Too tired to do their daily task;
And I've found them for evermore Has seemed the boon that was best to ask.

My feet have often been weary feet, Too tired to walk another day;
And I've thought, "To sit and calmly wait Is better far than the onward way."

My eyes with tears have been so dim That I have said, "I cannot mark The work I do or the way I take,
For everywhere it is dark—so dark!"

But, oh, thank God! There never has come That hour that makes the bravest quail;
No matter how weary my feet and hands, God never has suffered my heart to fail.

So the folded hands take up their work,
And the weary feet pursue their way;
And all is clear when the good heart cries,
"Be brave!—to-morrow's another day."

What Herbert Said.

"Don't go, Ellie; please don't! What will Herbert say?"

"I don't care in the least what Herbert says. He has no right to dictate to me. Not that he ever does," Ellie added, quickly. "Mr. Granville Ferguson has invited me to go to the Park with him, and there are four other ladies and their escorts to join us there. I am going, and I shall wear my new cashmere.
It is just the right length for skating. If you were good-natured, now, you would lend me the seal skin cap Uncle Will last gave you."

"You can have the cap, Ellie, but I do feel about Herbert. You know he loves you."

"He has never told me he loves me,"
"Never told you he loves you?" said Carrie. "Don't he come here every afternoon or evening to see you?"

"How do you know he doesn't come to see Aunt Fanny, or you?"

"Ellie!"

There was such keen pain in Carrie's tone that pretty Ellie sprang from her seat and remorsefully threw her arms around her sister, kissing her warmly, and saying, "If everybody knew you as well as I do, Carrie, how good and sweet you are, never cross or out of temper like me, and knowing twenty things where I have learned one, you would have fifty lovers. Men are such idiots. If a girl has a pretty face, that is all they ask."

Certainly, if this speech was true Ellie Wilson had no cause to complain of Nature's unkindness. She was very pretty, with a sunny face, full of sparkle and animation, and a dainty little figure, every movement of which was graceful.

But Carrie, only two years older than her sister, and not twenty-two, without any great beauty naturally, had, through the carelessness of a nurse in her infancy, been the victim of a fall, which had cut open one cheek, leaving a long, red scar, disfiguring her life. Her soft blue eyes, her glossy brown hair, her clear complexion, were all lost sight of in the long, blood-red mark that covered one side of her face from temple to chin. It grew purple in the cold air, crimson in summer heat, but it never faded away.

It had been poor Carrie's cross from childhood. Her school life had been embittered by the taunts of her companions, and she had shut herself up in a gloomy room, from society, from her sensitive shrinking from notice. It was not perhaps strange that Ellie, praised and petted all her life for her beauty, should also have given undue weight to her sister's misfortune. That Carrie would be an old maid and Ellie make a brilliant match was a certainty in the minds of the family and friends.

But relatives and friends alike were pleased when Herbert Brandon, after the death of Mr. Wilson, became a constant visitor at the house of the orphan girls. He had been their father's clerk and later his junior partner, and still carried on with one other surviving partner the business of Wilson & Co., though the head of the house had been three years dead at the time my story opens. Business at first, and afterwards certainly his own good pleasure, brought him often to see the young ladies and their aunt, who had filled their dead mother's place for many long years. He was a man whose life would honor any woman, and Carrie was not alone in supposing that pretty Ellie was the chosen of his heart.

Carrie liked to think so. Of all the nurses that came to visit her pretty sister, Herbert was certainly the one she would select for a brother. Never having thought it possible that she could win closer love than a brother's, Carrie was naturally very anxious about Ellie's choice, and she shrank with positive pain whenever she thought that Granville Ferguson was usurping Herbert's place. He was a far handsomer man, wore finer dress, had diamonds sparkling from his shirt-front and little finger, lived in handsome chambers, and was the pink of courtesy. And yet Carrie did not like him.

On the day when Ellie so willfully persisted in accepting Granville Fer-guson's escort to the Park, Herbert was travelling to spend the evening, to try some duets. But Ellie said, Herbert and the duets could be had at any time, while skating was a luxury to be seized whenever the opportunity occurred.

So, when Granville Ferguson, in his jacket overcoat, with a tiny bouquet in the buttonhole, made his appearance just before sunset, he found Ellie with the new brown cashmere and seal skin hat waiting for him. She had put the crisp ruffles into a ruff lined with blue silk and the bewildering blue law under her pretty chin, and her hair was in the puff of golden curls under the rim of the cap. When the ornamental water, brilliantly illuminated by the moon, was reached, Ellie's feet could scarcely keep still to have the skates fastened.

They were well matched upon the ice, for there were few of her own sex as graceful and expert upon skates as pretty Ellie Wilson. In her eager excitement she overlooked, entirely forgot, the fact that the party her escort had promised to meet did not appear, and she glided among the groups gathered around her, nodding now and again to friend or acquaintance, sparkling and happy.

She was becoming tired, and turned to suggest to her companion a few moments' rest on the bank, when she saw him accosted by two men, who, without skates, were standing upon the ice near him. They were not near enough to hear the conversation, as she had darted off a few minutes before for a long sweep on the glassy surface of the lake, supposing Granville Ferguson followed beside her.

It made her uneasy to see him walking away with his new companions, leaving her alone in the crowd around her. She knew that it was getting late, and already the concourse of people was thinning rapidly. There was a long walk to be taken, and she was growing conscious of curious looks directed toward her.
Granville Ferguson was no longer to be seen, and her loneliness was becoming almost unbearable, when her friend, Mrs.
Morrison, with her husband, skated to her side.

"Don't faint, Ellie," her friend began;
"we will take care of you. You must come to our house to-night."

"What has happened?"

"Granville Ferguson has been arrested."

"Arrested!" cried poor Ellie, with white lips, for the handsome scamp had won more than a passing interest in her heart. "For what?"

"Passing a forged bill. He is one of a Western gang the police are seeking.
Come, you must go home with us, and we will send you home early in the morning."

"But Carrie!"

"She will be frightened, no doubt, but it will be for a few hours only."

And Mr. Morrison, seeing the gathering pallor of the pretty face, hastily sought a cab, put Ellie into it, his wife following.

In the meantime Carrie, in the quiet dress she always wore, thinking regretfully that finery of any kind would only make more conspicuous the disfiguring scar upon her face, waited for Herbert.
She could not help a little thrill of pleasure at the thought of a quiet evening with him alone, for her aunt generally nodded in silence over her knitting. She had faithfully tried to keep Ellie at home; that having failed, she could enjoy the evening. Ellie was very exacting of her lover's attentions, if lover he was, keeping him beside her constantly; while Carrie, as was habitual with her, kept in the background, listening to her sister's lively chat, and wondering why she could never jest and frolic with Herbert.

The little mantel clock was striking eight when he came. Aunt Fanny, who had been all day shopping in the keen winter air, had yielded to the drowsy influence of the warm room, and was quietly asleep in her arm-chair; but Carrie was awake, and went forward to meet the visitor.

"I am very sorry Ellie is out," she said, "but I'll try the duets with you if you wish."

A look of pleasure flashed into Herbert's face, but shy Carrie, looking down, missed it.

"But you usually have Ellie."

"Ellie does not sing as well as you do.
Her voice is not as good, and she is careless. But before we try the duets, sit here a little while and talk to me. I so seldom see you alone."

She sat down, wondering a little at the request, but the wonder grew deeper as Herbert talked to her. Little by little the truth came home to her that Herbert Brandon was glad, not sorry, to find Ellie gone, that the words her sister had spoken in jest, supposing them far from any truth, were indeed a fact, and that it was her own plain face, not Ellie's pretty one, Herbert came to see. In words whose earnest truth could not be doubted Herbert told her how her gentle sweetness, her useful, cheerful life had won his love, and that his hope of happiness for life rested upon her answer to the simple, unmistakable question that came at last.

"Will you be my wife, Carrie? Can you give to my keeping the happiness of your life, believing I will earnestly endeavor to guard you from every sorrow. I know I am not worthy—no man can be worthy of such a treasure as I ask, but I love you, darling, I love you."

He knew his love was returned when the shy but happy eyes were raised to his own. Yet involuntarily one little white hand was raised to cover the disfiguring scar. Tenderly Herbert pris-oned it, and pressed his own lips upon the cheek.

"Let me help you to forget that," he whispered.

They talked long and earnestly, each learning much unguessed before of the other's confidence, till the clock chimed eleven.

"It is time Ellie was home!" Carrie cried, starting at the sound.

"Where has she gone?"

"To Hyde Park with Granville Ferguson!"

Carrie, frightened at his evident agitation.

"I meant to tell you this evening, but I forgot everything else when I found you alone, Carrie. Granville Ferguson is one of a gang of forgers. Hill Lyman is a very intimate friend of one of the detectives, and this afternoon he told me they had secured the proofs against him for which they had been waiting for months. He has in his possession this evening a large sum derived from forgery and he was doubtless arrested at the Park. Hill told me the whole plan and invited me to go out and 'see the fun,' as he expressed it; but seeing no fun in the downfall of a man we have all met as a friend more or less, I declined. If I had only asked sooner for Ellie I might have gone to the Park. Did she expect to meet other friends?"

"She spoke of some ladies Mr. Ferguson was to meet," said Carrie, who was really crying at the thought of her sister's position, "but I do not know who they were. She always does meet friends at the Park, but I could not tell where to look for her. Oh, Herbert, it is dreadful! What can we do?"

"I will go out on the chance of finding her."

But when he reached the Park the lake was deserted. It was useless to seek for Ellie at that hour among her large circle of friends, and Herbert could only return to Carrie with his tidings.

Aunt Fanny was awake and thoroughly terrified by that time. She enjoyed a sensation and seldom had so fine an opportunity for hysterics, and so fell into them on the spot.

It was a dreary night for Carrie after Herbert left, for she could not listen to her Aunt's dismal forebodings without some answering fear in her own heart.
But quite early all terror was dissipated by Ellie's appearance.

"I came as early as they would let me," she said, after telling the event of the evening; "but I have not closed my eyes all night. I knew you would be uneasy about me."

She looked pale and wan, and Carrie saw that there was a deeper sorrow than she confessed in her warm heart. She bathed about, insisted upon putting her to bed to rest, brought her up a cup of coffee and petted her in a loving, tender fashion, that Ellie could not resist. For after a short struggle with herself, she whispered: "I am ashamed of it, Carrie, now; but I did like him so much, that when he asked me this afternoon to marry him I only put him off for a few days, meaning to say yes then. I did not quite like to engage myself till I had told you and Aunt Fan. Carrie was Herbert here?"

"Yes, dear. He went to the Park for you; but you were gone."

"He is always kind," sighed poor Ellie. "I don't love Herbert, Carrie, but I think he's the best friend we have.
Carrie!"—for Carrie's face certainly told secrets in spite of her efforts to keep down the blushes—"Carrie, look at me!
I will see!" and she lifted the shy, drooping face. "Is he to be my brother?"

"Yes, dear; he has applied for the situation."

"You absurd little thing! There, don't try to explain anything! I'll be your bridesmaid; and mind, Carrie, it is an immense relief to my mind to think I can flirt as much as I please and go where I like without your pitiless 'What will Herbert say?' for it appears to me he has said his say, as the old women express it, to some purpose."

And, after all, the red scar was hidden by a bridal veil, and Herbert Brandon sees no face so fair in his eyes as the disfigured one of his gentle, loving wife.

An Old Apple Tree.

The New Haven Palladium says:— An apple tree standing in Mr. Deloss Hotchkiss' door-yard, in the northwestern part of the town of Cheshire, is thought to be the largest in the United States.
Its age can be traced by a family tradition to 140 years at least, and it may be twenty or twenty-five years older. It is, at the present time, of symmetrical shape, and the trunk is nearly round, without a scar or blemish on it. There are eight large branches; five of these, Mr. Hotchkiss says, have been in the habit of bearing one year, and the remaining three the next, but when the Centennial year came the old tree, which must have attained the prime of ordinary apple tree life before the nation was born, expanded its blossoms into a complete crown of glory, and bore fruit all over the tree. Mr. Hotchkiss has had a crop of eighty-five bushels of fruit in one year from the five branches, and his professor had harvested a crop of 110 bushels from the same five branches.
The dimensions of the tree are: Girth, fourteen feet six inches; height, sixty feet; and the spread of the branches is six rods.

Whipping Behind.

The Montreal Witness says: As the omnibus running between Mount Royal Vale and the city was coming along Dorchester street west, the driver carelessly left his seat to go along the roof of the bus to order some boys off the back step, but when striking at the lads the horses started off at a full gallop, throwing the driver down to the ground. The occupants, unfortunately ladies, got alarmed at the rate they were going, screamed for help, and, seeing they were likely to come into collision with passing vehicles, finally determined to jump from the bus, which they did, each one receiving severe bruises in consequence. It is lucky for the proprietor, however, that they got off as well as they did. The horses continued their journey till stopped at the Post Office.

Old-time Punishment.

Discipline in New England schools and families was much more strict at the beginning of this century than it is now. School-boys' pranks, if they damaged property, were not passed over.
Parents had to pay for the mischief, and the boys had to make humble apologies for their thoughtless freaks.

While young R. B. Forbes, now a retired Boston merchant, was at Milton Academy, he was allowed to keep a little gun. Of course this made him a hero in the eyes of the other boys. One day he and several of his companions put up a mark on the powder-house door, and, much to its damage, blazed away.

When the thoughtless deed became known to the selectmen, they saw that firing at a door behind which there was powder sufficient to blow up the village was a grave offense. Young Forbes and his companions were ordered as a punishment not only to furnish a new door, but to call at the house of each selectman and beg his pardon.

The first house selected by the boys to express their contrition was a Mr.
Ford's. The fact that he had a cider-mill in operation determined the selection.

"What do you want?" asked Mr.
Ford, in gruff tones, looking up from his desk as the boys entered.

"We have been sent here to ask your pardon for firing at the powder-house," answered young Forbes.

"Well, what more?"

"Nothing, sir. Must we go to any other of the selectmen?"

"No; away with you!"

"May we snuck some cider, sir?"

"Yes. Get along with you and snuck all you want!"

The parents furnished a new door, and thus ended the "discipline."

When a Woman Will She Will.

The Rome (N. Y.) Sentinel has a curious story about a married couple in Springfield. It says: "When a Massachusetts woman forms a habit it is all a waste of time for her husband to try to break her of it. Well knowing his wife's disposition to make him a present regularly at the anniversary of his birthday, a citizen of the Bay State, who likewise forcibly realized the fact that economy was an absolute necessity in his household, said to his wife: 'This year you must not undertake to make me a present, I insist. It would be absurd to do so at this time, when we need everything we can rake and scrape.
I give you fair warning that if you do carry out your former custom this year, I will burn up your present as surely as you make it.' So the wife bethought herself. She could not bear the idea of being deprived of her annual pleasure.
Therefore she gathered together her dimes and bought for her dearly beloved, as a birthday present, a ton of coal."

Determined to Succeed.

A newspaper correspondent says: I was at Saratoga eight or nine years ago and attending an entertainment in the ball-room of the United States Hotel.
At the close an old French gentleman arose and begged the audience to listen to his daughters sing. Among the few who attended to the request, the writer saw two rather shabby figures advance behind the old gentleman; they were his daughters, and one was the Albani of to-day, who was then listened to merely as a matter of courtesy, as there was nothing at all in her voice then to foreshadow the great fame she now enjoys.
The father would, however, persist that his daughter could sing, and when others turned away in disgust he held steadfastly to his faith, and she, in spite of slights and difficulties, persisted and went onward. You may have read of a magnificent home in London where Albani lives with that old father and the sister who was her companion in the shabby bonnet and shawl that failed even in the slightest degree to enliven the interest of a Saratoga ball-room audience. Lately, the newspapers tell us, she had twenty-three recitals in one night before a critical audience in St. Petersburg, and the great and the high are now busy in her laudation. Is this a reason, dear girls, for taking courage to persevere?

Sheep as Beasts of Burden.

In the "Colonies and India" we find a note respecting the employment of sheep as beasts of burden. In Eastern Turkistan and Tibet, for instance, borax is borne on the backs of sheep over the mountains to Leh, Kangra, and Rampur on the Sutlej. Borax is found at Hudok, in Changshan, of such excellent quality that only twenty-five per cent is lost in the process of refining.
The Hudok borax is carried on sheep to Rampur, which travel at the rate of two miles a day; but, notwithstanding the superior quality and the demand for it in Europe, the expense attending its transportation seriously hampers the trade, which, but for the sheep, would hardly exist at all.

ALWAYS.—Inspecting officer in barracks to stalwart defender of his country.—Well, my man, are you satisfied with your rations?

S. D. of his C.—Yes, sir.

Inspecting Officer.—How is the meat divided? Don't you sometimes get a small ration and sometimes a large one?

S. D. of his C.—No, sir; we always get a small one.

A bill now before the Legislature of Wisconsin contains a provision for punishing tramps, under certain conditions, with whipping.

GENERAL ITEMS.

—For fifteen years no Governor of North Carolina has served out his full term.

—Some citizens of Louisville, Ky., have formed an alliance to secure a better observance of the Sunday law in that city.

—The Town Treasurer of Kennebunkport, Me., gets $25 a year and gives bonds for $12,000.

—A little more than a hundred years ago Newport, R. I., had a greater foreign trade than New York.

—The leading temperance worker in Racine, Wis., is the wife of a liquor dealer. She acts understandingly.

—Already three claims to the $15 bounty offered by the Princess Louise for triplets have been made within a fortnight.

—Forty Pennsylvania soldiers and their families are about to remove to the far West, taking up their several grants of 160 acres of land.

—A young lady in Denver, Col., is said to have been badly poisoned by absorption from arsenic used by her laundress in starching.

—The ladies of Japan are said to gild their teeth, and those of the Indies to paint them red, while in Guzerat the test of beauty is to render them sable.

—A Troy paper says that Assemblyman Mann was presented with $100,000 by his father upon his marriage, and with $100,000 more when he was elected to the Assembly.

—A preliminary examination of a gang of young burglars at Chicago recently elicited the fact that within a month they had committed thirteen successful burglaries.

—The Albany Press estimates the value of the ice harvest along the Hudson this season at $4,432,000, assuming the ice to be worth $3 per ton, and that 1,811,200 tons have been gathered.

—A courageous Boston girl, about to marry a comparatively poor young man, has requested her dear friends not to make her any wedding presents, as she may not be able to reciprocate in the future.

—Farming on a grand scale, even with the assistance of improved machinery and implements, is a dangerous experiment, and in the West has terminated disastrously. It is estimated that the money sunk during the past ten years in such undertakings amounts to over $100,000,000.

—At the suggestion of Queen Victoria the names of the men who lost their lives during the storm in the Bay of Biscay in October, 1877, in their efforts to rescue the crew of the boat carrying Cleopatra's needle, are to be placed upon the pedestal supporting the obelisk.

—In Norway a horse can help himself to water the same as he does to hay, and accordingly eats and drinks like a human being at meals—a sip, then some hay, and so on. Broken-winded horses are almost unknown in Norway.

—Mrs. Nesbitt, a Kankakee (Ill.) invalid, was being kept alive by stimulants, and could have lived only a few days longer under any circumstances. A blundering druggist gave her a dose of laudanum for port wine. His defense is that no real harm was done.

—A man, now residing in Idaho, who twenty-six years ago cut his foot badly by stepping upon some broken glass, has just had a piece of the glass removed from his foot. The glass had shifted its position about six inches, working back and upward from the toe to the ankle.

—There was a raising bee in Spencer County, Ind., followed by a ball in the evening, and a rule was adopted that nobody should dance who had not worked at the raising of the house frame.
Nathaniel Woods had not qualified himself in the required manner, but insisted on dancing. A row was the result and Woods was killed.

—A woodchopper on Lewis's Mountain, Wis., amused himself by riding astride the logs as they slid down a snowy incline, and jumping off just before they went over a precipice. The fall was over 150 feet, and the danger involved in the sport fascinating to the woodchopper; but he finally ventured too far, of course, and went down under a heavy log.

—Two miners of Humboldt Wells, Nev., being drunk, went to the cabin of a woodchopper to have some fun with him. He was a silly fellow and the common butt of the neighborhood, but on this occasion he refused to be fooled with. The drunkards resented his lack of complacency and tried to scare him with their revolvers. Then he cut them down with an axe, killing both.

—Frank Frayne, who calls himself a "shooting star" actor, has devised a way of endangering two lives at once in his stage rifle feats. He shoots an apple off his wife's head, and the bullet hits mechanism attached to the trigger of a second rifle, from which is shot a bullet piercing an apple suspended close over his own head. Mrs. Frayne has only one thumb. The other was popped off by her husband last winter.

—Nancy Wa-pa-coons is an Indian maiden of the Miami tribe, living near Wabash, Ind. She desired a white husband and advertised for one, hinting that the accepted one would get a comfortable home by marrying her. John Hazelton Madison, 60 years old, exceedingly tall and lean, with his nose awry by reason of breakage, and very lame in one leg, presented himself at Nancy's dwelling as a candidate. She said not a word, but drove him out with a club.

WITH THE PARAGRAPHERS.

—The Charge of the Light Brigade—Gas Bills.—Puck.

—Billiardists are harem-cam sort of fellows.—St. Louis Post.

—When you have a family jar you can't always preserve the peace.—Boston Traveler.

—There's music in the hair," said a Jones. Jones has a brand-new baby at his house.—Boston Traveler.

—When a man who cannot write is asked to sign his name it generally makes him X.—Boston Bulletin.

—Montreal makes her street car horses last ten years. The passengers wear out in about seven.—Detroit Free Press.

—The difference between a duck and a girl is that one is dressed to kill and the other is killed to dress.—Washington Capital.

—On leaving a room make your best salute to the persons present, and retire without saluting the door.—New Orleans Picayune.

—If every business man would do a "no trust" trade, his money would not rust in other people's pockets.—Hackensack Republican.

—Adelina Patti is worth $5,000,000, and the Marquis is in great trepidation lest his should turn out a lost Caux.— Jersey City Journal.

—The foundation for the meanest man is laid when a small boy turns the worm-hole in an apple for his companion to bite from.—Reading Times.

—The world never knows the great respect lawyers have for one another until one of them dies and there is a meeting of the bar.—Rome Sentinel.

—Capt. Eads, of jolly fame, now sails the steam yacht formerly owned by Tweed, of jettier notoriety. "And jolly is not happy."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

—Barkeeper to Tramp—"Get out of this, or I'll give you the grand bousoo." Tramp to Barkeeper—"Make it plain cherry bousoo, and I'll go ye."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

—There is no such word as "fail." One realizes the awful force of this when seeing a boy run forty rods in order to get a "hitch" and ride forty feet.—Detroit Free Press.

—If an actor is desirous of appearing in "several pieces" in one evening, let him smoke a cigar in a nitro-glycerine factory. He will bring down the house, too.—Norristown Herald.

—A man may be liberal and whole-souled, but if he writes in

A Female Robinson Crusoe.

San Francisco papers contain a very interesting account of an Indian woman, who was abandoned on San Nicolas Island, on the coast of Southern California, and spent eighteen years alone there before she was rescued. The woman went to the island with a party of natives and left them to go into the interior and gather wood. Returning, she found the party in canoes and about to sail. Not finding her three children in the boats she swam ashore. She did not find her children, but supposed they were devoured by the wild dogs on the island. She became very sick and lay a long time without either water or food, but finally recovered and forgot her grief in wandering about the island. She lived on a plant resembling the cabbage, roots, seal or sea-lion blubber. As she had abalone shellfish hooks and lines made of the sinews of the seal, it is probable she supplied herself with fish from the ocean. Eighteen years after this, a party visited the island on an otter and seal hunt. The Indian woman was found in one of the pens she had built as a wind-break. She was clothed in a garment made of the skins of the shag, without sleeves, low neck, and, as observed when standing up, extending almost to the ankle. She was sitting, cross-legged, skinning seal blubber with a rude knife, made of a piece of hoop iron driven into a piece of wood.

There was no covering on her head excepting a thick mass of matted hair of a yellowish brown color, due to the exposure to the sun and air. The hair was short, looking as if the free ends had rotted off. There were several wild dogs about the enclosure, which growled savagely at the visitors, but were driven off by their mistress. The woman made no attempt to get away. The woman appeared to be very happy in her island home, but it took very little to induce her to leave. She landed at Santa Barbara and was a great curiosity. Change of food and habits so affected her constitution that she lived but four or five weeks after her arrival at her new home.