

THE MALVERN LEADER.

VOL. XIX.

MALVERN, MILLS COUNTY, IOWA, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 1893.

NO. 3.

MALVERN

Hardware and Implement

COMPANY

(SUCCESSORS TO J. R. & J. W. FOULKS)

We are making Prices to suit the times on the following Lines:

Buggies, Carriages and Spring Wagons.

Moline and Charter Oak Farm Wagons.

Stoves and Builders Hardware.

We Handle the Celebrated

Universal Stoves and Ranges,

A Complete Line, They Have no Equal.

Be sure and see our line.

YOURS RESPECTFULLY,

Malvern Hardware and Implement Company.

MALVERN, IOWA.

First National Bank

Capital and Earnings $80,000

J. M. STRAHAN, Pres't. M. L. EVANS, Vice Pres't. JAS. J. WILSON, Cash.

DIRECTORS.

J. M. Strahan.
S. D. Davis.
J. V. Hinckman.
M. L. Evans.
H. W. Summers.

STOCKHOLDERS.

S. D. Davis.
O. T. Genger.
O. W. Ward.
Mrs. Sena Gidley.
James J. Wilson.
M. L. Evans.
J. V. Hinckman.
A. J. Davis.
H. W. Summers.
John Evans, Jr.
J. M. Strahan.

JOHN ROBRAHN, Merchant Tailor.

MALVERN, IOWA.

Rooms in the rear of the First National Bank Building.

In addition to a stock of goods constantly kept on hand, I carry a full line of samples of all the latest styles, from which to order.

Work Warranted Satisfactory.

BOOTS Remember the Old Boot and Shoe House

—AND—

SHOES J. P. RETELSDORF

Has on hand a full line of reliable staple Boots and Shoes and invites all the people of Malvern and vicinity, both old and young, to come and learn our prices. We will make a drive this spring that will paralyze competition and popularize our stock. All Boots and Shoes you buy of us are warranted. Rip in seams will be repaired gratis. Your dealings with us will convince you that our aim in conducting business has always been to give satisfaction to our customers, both in quality of goods and in prices.

Remember also that not a pair of shoes will be repaired bought outside our store in Malvern.

CLEAVER'S MEAT MARKET!

FRESH AND CURED MEATS OF ALL KINDS.

We carry a choice line of Pickles, Meat Sauces, Canned Fish and Oysters.

Cash paid for Hides and Tallow.

J. E. CLEAVER.

CHEAP MONEY.

Money to Loan on Long Time At Low Rates of Interest.

If you have a loan about to mature, or want to make a loan on your farm, call on

W. M. M. EVANS,

Notary Public and Insurance written.

THE LEADER.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.
BY S. C. HUNTER & CO.
S. C. HUNTER, EDITOR.

Terms of Subscription,
One Copy, one year.....$1 50
One Copy, six months..... 75
One Copy, three months..... 40
The date on the printed tag indicates the time to which the subscription is paid.
John Doe 1 Jan 1893
shows that Mr. Doe's subscription has been paid to January 1, 1893.
No papers will be sent to subscribers outside of Mills County unless the subscription is paid in advance.

REPUBLICAN STATE TICKET.

Governor.....FRANK D. JACKSON
Lieutenant-Governor.....W. S. DUNGAN
Supreme Judge.....GEO. S. ROBINSON
Supt. Public Instruction.....HENRY SABIN
Railroad Commissioner.....J. W. LUKE

COUNTY TICKET.

Representative.....THOMAS M. BRITT
Treasurer.....A. D. FRENCH
Sheriff.....M. H. BYERS
County Superintendent.....O. R. PATRICK
Surveyor.....SETH DEAN
Coroner.....DR. J. N. AGAN
Member Board—11th Dist. W. S. GOODELL

It is expected that there will be a bitter fight in Congress over the proposed repeal of the Federal election law.

It is announced that President and Mrs. Cleveland's second daughter will be christened Esther. The name is said to be Mrs. Cleveland's choice.

The English House of Lords, as was expected, defeated the Home Rule bill by an overwhelming majority. What a pity the Grand Old Man is not twenty years younger.

A great many southern war claims are being introduced in Congress, one Senator in one day presenting claims for cotton and other property destroyed to the amount of $1,000,000.

The Ways and Means Committee at Washington are hearing manufacturers on the tariff question, and much of what they hear is discouraging to the enemies of the protective tariff.

Representative Hager will introduce in Congress in a few days a bill for a public building in Atlantic to cost $50,000 and a bill to establish a branch mint at Council Bluffs to cost $200,000.

The New York dispatches say that hundreds of Italians and Scandinavians are leaving the United States for their native lands. The reason assigned is the lack of employment owing to the hard times. This is something that has not occurred before for a great many years.

THE LEADER has been favored with a copy of the program of the reunion of the Pottawattamie County Veterans Association to be held at Avoca on September 26 and 28 inclusive. The program is quite elaborate and the reunion will doubtless be an interesting occasion for the veterans.

Such staunch prohibitionists as John Mahin, Senator Harlan, Senator Clark, L. S. Coffin, Judge Struble, Judge Deemer and many others of equally pronounced views are heartily supporting the Republican ticket. Ex-Senator Harlan, Senator Clark and Judge Deemer have written strong letters stating their position.

Col. Henderson in an address prepared for delivery before the Army of the Tennessee, among other things gave expression to these words of wisdom: "Art, poetry, romance, and history have magnified and glorified the soldier but the time is coming when these great instruments of power will desert their favorite theme and will pay homage to men who lead the great forces of thought away from the slaughter house up to the higher fields of human action." And presently he added, "The great man reasons, the small man fights."

Some of the "country" editors who have for months been filling their columns with booming advertisements of the World's Fair are learning to their sorrow, when applying for promised "courtesies," that the management of the fair having gotten out of them all they can hope for are ready to deny them all favors and treat them as a set of beggars. It is humiliating to the average newspaper man to be treated in this way, but this free puffing of every enterprise, on the score of "patriotism," nearly always has just such a reward. The management are very profuse in promises until they have received the help of the country press, upon which the success of their scheme so largely depends, and then—well "we are compelled to retrench and cannot extend the courtesies to the press that we should like." But then the country press is to blame for this condition of things and should not complain.

Hon. J. S. Coffin declines the nomination for Governor tendered him by the citizens prohibition convention. He thinks leaving the Republican party now would defeat hope of retaining prohibition and this he is not willing to have a part in doing. There is no chance for a third party to achieve anything for prohibition, in Mr. Coffin's estimation.

The New York World is calling upon the farmers of the West to contribute each "a bag of wheat to the starving multitude of unemployed in the great cities." The proverbial generosity of the West will respond freely to need wherever found, but while giving bread to the hungry many will wonder if such papers as the World are not very largely responsible for this suffering.

Some weeks ago THE LEADER made mention of a brutal attack on Miss Melton, a missionary who went from Randolph to Turkey, and that efforts would be made by the government to bring the perpetrators to justice. Secretary Gresham has within a few days received a report from the American Minister at Constantinople which says that Turks suspected of the outrage have been arrested and taken to the capitol of the province for trial.

It makes us tired to read some of the "arguments" put forth to prove that the platform of '93 is the best prohibition platform the Iowa Republicans have ever adopted. Many sincere prohibition Republicans will doubtless support the ticket if not too thoroughly disgusted with this kind of balderdash, simply because there is no other party they can turn to that can or will better serve the cause of temperance. Do not add insult to injury by attempting to palm off such rot upon intelligent people.

Lafe Young in his Iowa Capital puts a great deal of solid truth in a small space when he says, "the crowning mistake of all on the part of Prohibitionists has been that after all the legislation was enacted they laid down and went to sleep on their arms. And many of them have simply put in the intervening time in scolding the Republican party because prohibition has not been more successful. And still others have been engaged in saying that the Republican party has been a hypocrite all these years and enacted prohibition solely for political purposes, and never was sincere in what it did." Prohibitionists in all parties should never forget that they have a sleepless enemy that never gives up the fight no matter what the adverse odds may be.

Iowa Republicans have a splendid opportunity this year for the exercise of charity. Because your neighbor may not agree with you regarding the position of the party on the question of prohibition is no reason why he should be denounced as a crank or hypocrite. You have a right to your view in the matter and he has an equal right to his; and your view may not be a whit more honest than his. Let each voter exercise his right of voting as his conscience may dictate, untrammelled by personal or party dictation. If the citizen should be more honest and conscientious one place or at one time than at all others, it would seem to be when he exercises the responsible prerogative of voting—an act that affects his neighbor no less than himself. Be charitable.

The "Grand Old Man."
An American girl in London writes to the New York Press: "I saw Mr. Gladstone crossing Piccadilly Circus about 4 o'clock this afternoon. The crush was tremendous—buses, cabs, vans and struggling humanity on foot 'stopping the way.' But everybody, from 'Bobby' on guard to the gamine crying the evening papers, recognized the 'Grand Old Man.' Instantly hands were raised and traffic suspended until the Premier of England had safely passed the London Rubicon. Every eye was centered upon the octogenarian. The man about town withdrew his ardent gazing monocular from the passing tailor made girl; the 'city man' turned and for the moment forgot his stocks and shares; Lady Clara Vere de Vere designed to bestow a passing glance from the soft cushions of her aristocratic rolling barouche—I even fancied I saw a turn of the eye from her powdered footman; Tommy Atkins of the Grenadier Guards was for once oblivious of the charms of the blushing nursery maid, and raised his hand in respectful salute, while the 'rag tag and bob tail' in wild excitement thronged in procession like the colored population of Washington after a brass band, and every now and then a beer-cracked voice bawled forth: 'Hi, boys, there goes old Gladstone!'

Corning Presbytery on Prohibition.

At the fall meeting of Corning Presbytery held at Conway recently the following resolutions pertaining to the temperance question were adopted:

WHEREAS: We recognize that there are conditions at the present time that lead us to infer that an effort may be made at the session of our next Legislature to repeal our present prohibitory law and to substitute for it either high license or local option.

First: Therefore in accord with the uniform declaration of the Presbyterian Church through its lower courts and by its General Assembly, we affirm our unalterable conviction that prohibition is the only legal method of dealing with the liquor traffic, that is right in principle and wise in policy.

Second: We urge all our members to resist any movement looking toward the repeal of our present prohibitory law, in favor of license or local option, and we personally pledge ourselves to do the same.

Third: We call the attention of all our ministers to the fact that the General Assembly has set apart the third Sabbath of September to be devoted to the discussion and advocacy of temperance and we urge them that on this or some other convenient Sabbath they present the subject to their respective congregations.

HERE AND THERE.

Shelby County dedicated a new $60,000 Court House at Harlan last week.

The annual Conference of the Southwestern Iowa Christian Church met at Stuart yesterday.

"The Grand Hotel" at Council Bluffs is again closed. The "Grand" is evidently too grand for Council Bluffs.

Remember the Mills County Fair at Malvern, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, Sept. 26, 27, 28 and 29.

American: The sugar famine was broken in Griswold Saturday. All our merchants who deal in groceries received a supply. One firm dealt out in small quantities 2000 pounds.

The Red Oak Herald is a new paper published in the interest of the Baptist Church. The Presbyterians are contemplating the publication of such a paper for Corning Presbytery. Such papers if properly conducted might be made very helpful to the work.

The annual meeting of the Young People's Societies of Christian Endeavor of Southwestern Iowa will be held at Clarinda on October 6, 7 and 8. These are the same dates of the Council Bluffs district convention of the Young Men's Christian Association at Corning.

Two teams met on a Pottawattamie County bridge in the dark and one, with three persons in the buggy, backed off and fell eighteen feet. The occupants were all more or less hurt, but none seriously. W. A. Webber, a former Mills Countyite, was driving one team, but escaped injury.

Oscola Sentinel: E. O. Wally was handling a bunch of bananas, Saturday, that had been in the grocery several hours. A "cotton mouthed" snake crept out, twenty inches long, and slipped into another bunch. It was captured, killed and put in alcohol. It is a spotted, hideous creature.

Beacon: We learn from the current issue of the Sent of God that the faith school will be opened up at the Home in Tabor at once. The school will be conducted under the superintendency of Mrs. Hattie Worcester. The common branches will be taught, also a special class for those who wish to receive instruction and training for gospel work. At present only those who are poor, destitute, homeless or orphans, or the children of gospel workers who are giving their whole time to preaching will be taken into the school. Other children will be taken into this Home only as arrangements are made for their support.

The Council Bluffs district of Young Men's Christian Associations, embracing the counties of Harrison, Shelby, Audubon, Guthrie, Pottawattamie, Cass, Adair, Mills, Montgomery, Adams, Union, Fremont, Page, Taylor and Ringgold, will have a convention at Corning from October 6 to 8 inclusive. On the program we find the following names: Rev. J. F. St. Clair, Creston; Prof. E. H. Hamilton, Malvern; W. A. Magee (State Secretary), Des Moines; F. M. Wright, Council Bluffs; E. W. Titus, Creston; W. D. Hart, Red Oak; S. L. Thomas, Creston; C. O. Mitchell (State Secretary), Des Moines. The topics to be discussed embrace many themes of great interest to association workers and the convention will undoubtedly be one of great profit.

The old settlers reunion for Mills, Pottawattamie and Fremont Counties, held at Sidney last week, was not so well attended as it would have been had the committee been able to secure special trains. As it was the attendance was confined almost entirely to those within reach by team, and yet there was quite a crowd present. The Sideseites did royally in extending entertainment and a very enjoyable day was the result. The officers selected for the ensuing year are: President, Thomas Mitchell, Sidney; Vice-President, O. W. Black, Malvern; Secretary, S. O. Hunter, Malvern; Treasurer, S. A. Bonham, Council Bluffs. The committee appointed to select the next place of meeting were unanimously in favor of Malvern and consequently this place was chosen for the reunion next year. Malvern has already entertained the association twice, and in a most satisfactory manner, and will be pleased to extend its hospitality the third time.

T. D. Gibson

HAS ABOUT THE OLDEST ESTABLISHED

GROCERY HOUSE,

IN MALVERN, BUT WITHOUT DOUBT IT IS THE FINEST IN MILLS COUNTY.

His Large Stock is Now Larger than Ever And Prices Lower

Hams,
Bacon,
Bologna,
Dried Beef,
Mackerel,
White Fish,
Salmon,
Pickles,

Dried Fruit,
Canned Fruit,
Oranges,
Lemons,
Candy,
Cigars,
Nuts,
Honey,

Cheese,
Crackers,
Cakes,
Jelly,
Bananas,
Figs,
Dates,
Syrup,

ALL FRESH AND CHEAP.

Produce taken in exchange at the Highest Market Price when the price of goods is considered.

T. D. GIBSON,
MALVERN.

Geo. B. Foulks's Music Room

FOR PIANO OR ORGAN:
LARGE STOCK TO SELECT FROM.

PRICES TO SUIT THE TIMES.

If you are thinking of buying

PIANO or ORGAN

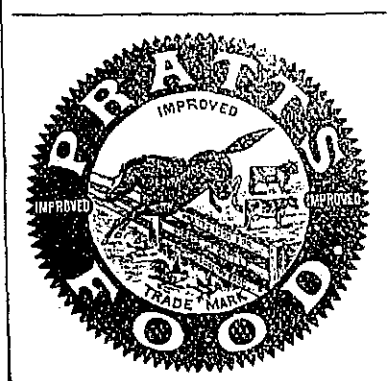

and do not see my stock and get my prices and terms you will lose money. I sell more goods than any of the dealers. The reason is I have fine Pianos and Organs, and prices so low that people can afford to buy.

YOURS FOR BUSINESS,

GEO. B. FOULKS.

First door north Strahan & Christy's Bank in Geo. Mellor's Jewelry Store.

CASH TELLS

Crockery.
Glassware.

Perfect Satisfaction to Every Customer.

Groceries:

TABLE LUXURIES:
PRODUCE:

MALVERN, IOWA.

MALVERN

LUMBER YARD.

We keep constantly on hand a well assorted stock of Lumber, Lath, Shingles, Doors, Sash and Blinds, Lime, Cement, Plaster, Hair, Lath Fence, &c., &c.

CALL AND GET PRICES.

GREENWOOD & MORSE,

Successors to Roose & Wainwright.

Farmers' National Bank

MALVERN.

CAPITAL, $50,000

General Banking Business Transacted, Farm Loans Negotiated.

We Solicit Your Patronage.

OFFICERS AND DIRECTORS.

A. J. CHANTRY, J. M. JOHNSON, THOS. PAUL,
JUDGE J. R. REED, A. H. DOLPH, J. O. TAYLOR, Wm. M. EVANS.

J. H. RETELSDORF,

Merchant Tailor

Store on First Avenue, North of Popular Shoe House.

Malvern, Iowa.

I have a nice lot of piece goods from which to select your suits. A perfect fit guaranteed. My friends are invited to call,—I will give them bargains.

THE LEADER.

S. C. HUNTER & CO., Publishers.
WALVER, IOWA.

The old-fashioned street cars are going rapidly out of use, but the people still hold on to the straps.

A CRUSADE has been started in England against the application of the word "esquire" to persons who have no right to it.

The electric light, or for that matter a light of any kind, is said to be least conducive to the formation of a trust in a Sunday evening front parlor.

When a chattel mortgage shark is shown to have exercised sharkish proclivities, he should be given just as large a dose of reformation as the law will permit.

Now if the scientists who have discovered that cholera is only a form of poisoning by nitric acid will only find out some universal antidote and counteract the whole world will throw bouquets at them.

A footish burglar tried to break into the residence of a Chicago policeman. That he was detected, captured, and locked up impairs the utility of the incident for the eastern newspaper humorist.

This quaint old Viking ship is able to show her heels to our graceful modern sailing craft after all. Those blonde-haired Norsemen knew a thing or two about swift sailing if they did flourish nearly 900 years ago.

The Spanish peasant works every day and dances half the night, and yet eats only his black bread, onion, and watermelon. The Spaniard porter eats only a little fruit and some olives, yet he walks off with his load of 200 pounds.

We cannot afford to waste or ignore or despise anything; for, however useless it may appear to our short-sighted vision, we know not what treasures of future growth and advancement may be enfolded within it, or how readily it may respond to wise culture.

Down in Georgia they are levying a tax on bicycles. Even this does not allow the flying wheelmen to knock over anyone who happens to come in their way, but the bleeding taxpayer thus treated has whatever satisfaction can be gathered from the fact that the reckless rider is paying for his fun.

During the series of dry seasons that we had for several years previous to 1892, we were told that the cutting down of the forests would ultimately make a desert of the whole country. Last year and this we have not heard so much concerning this danger. The causes that control rain fall are not well understood yet.

BANDIT STARR, when captured at Colorado Springs, asked the officers, "Who do you think you've got?" He thus toly murdered American syntax and added another to his many crimes. Had he inquired, "Whom do you think you have?" plain hanging by the neck would, in consideration of his past conduct, have been adequate punishment.

Nothing will so quickly indicate ill-breeding in a person as the talking of scandal or the listening to it. Of the two evils, giving attention to evil-speaking, or idle gossip, or unpleasant personalities, is the greater. It is a low-minded, vulgar person who will discuss the ill-doings or weaknesses of others, and good society does not sanction it. Don't be a scandal-monger.

Nothing rankles in the heart like injustice. Try to understand the motives of conduct, and never doubt the word, or refuse to accept the explanation of erring children. They may deceive you, but trusting them will make them true, while continual doubt will make the noblest sly and deceitful. Give them the benefit, always, of any doubt as to their conduct, and they will strive to be what you think they are.

A pure heart, a generous disposition, and a habit of self-control are all conducive to clear ideas and true views. Free from the blinding clouds of passion or prejudice, vanity or ambition, selfishness or envy, the mind arises in its dignity and its native power. It is then able to examine reasons, sift motives, foresee results, and arrive at sound conclusions. Untrammelled by the fetters of excessive hope or fear, it is free to discern the laws which govern human nature, and which determine right-doing.

The report of railway construction for the first half of the current year shows an abrupt stoppage of needless expansion. No more roads are reaching out into regions where they are not yet needed. The total new mileage for the half year is about one-third less than in 1892, and less than any previous year since 1875. The financial stringency has doubtless caused this result. The era of wild speculation has about reached the end, and the railways give an admission that smaller business interests might profitably follow.

Some of the Chicago papers are lamenting the alleged fact that they cannot get American music that satisfies their fastidious taste. With their environments of howling cat, squealing pigs shrieking whistles, rumbling street cars, and rattling vehicles of all descriptions, it would be thought that the sounds of an ordinary beller yard would be music to the ears of the people of the breezy city. But they are putting on a good many high class airs over there since they entertained a few scattering representatives of European blue blood.

ELL PERKINS, writing from Western Nebraska to the New York Sun, tells of some of the wonders of the Western country, including a 400,000-horse power stream that rushes through the town of Gothenburg; and of housewives in Kearney who heat sad-irons, fryeggs, and make batter-cakes by electricity. And yet the New York papers go on prating about "the wild and woolly West." Eastern people will this year more than ever before be able to form an opinion of the West from personal inspection—and the romancers of New York and Boston newspapers will have to change their tunes.

THERE is a passage in the writings of Rousseau which is as true to human nature as it is beautiful in expression. "Were I in a desert," he writes, "I would find out, wherewith in it to call forth my affections. If I could do no better, I would fasten them on some sweet myrtle, on some melancholy cypress, which I would court for their shade and greet kindly for their protection. I would write my name upon them, and declare that they were the sweetest trees through-out all the desert. If their leaves withered, I would teach myself to mourn; and, when they flourished, I would rejoice in their increase." Such is the absolute necessity which exists in the human heart of having something to love.

The Waldenses—the descendants of the famous sect which was persecuted for centuries on account of their religious opinions, and who still inhabit the mountain tract on the Italian side of the Cottian Alps, where their ancestors held out against their persecutors—propose to emigrate to America. Their business of cloth-making has fallen off, and even with their frugality they find it difficult to pay their way. The pastors of the Waldensian congregations convened a synod to consider the situation, and resolved to send two delegates to North Carolina, to inquire regarding the prospects of settling in that State. The Waldenses are a thrifty people, retaining in a remarkable degree the virtues of their heroic ancestors. If the reports from the delegates turn out to be favorable, 2,000 Waldenses will emigrate during the year to North Carolina.

DETROIT NEWS:—Chicago's claim of 2,000,000 population, backed up with nearly half a million names in her lately-published directory, is likely to make the great metropolis of the Atlantic board prick up its ears. New York has felt the danger that has threatened its pre-eminence for a good many years, and has done what best it could to avert it. There has been scarcely a session of the Empire State Legislature during the past decade without the appearance of some scheme to enlarge the boundaries of the great city so as to include the city of Brooklyn and the Jersey shore. There is claimed to be a population of 4,000,000 who naturally belong to New York; and these people would long ago have been united if it had not been for the many centers of separate interests that now exist in the many surrounding cities. Local politics have had much to do with it. Questions of the division of tax-burdens have had more to do with it. It now looks as if Chicago has the inside track for metropolitan honors, and that she will keep it.

POOR SIAM! Siam seems to have dropped out of sight as a question of public interest. Indeed there was never any particular interest in the trials of this little abode of Asiatic despotism. Siam's importance was derived from its entanglement with England and France. Now it would appear that those two powers have compromised their differences, at the expense of the bene of contention. It will not be unprecedented if before long each should enlarge its colonial area, and there should be no Siam.

Without dwelling upon the ethics of such a proceeding, it may as well be frankly acknowledged that few nations of our own day have the right to cast a stone at the land grabbers. Columbus, in the name of Leon and Castile, began land grabbing four hundred years ago, and it has been kept up pretty steadily ever since. The American colonists were land grabbers, with more or less consideration for the claims of the aborigines; France and England reached out after India, and England got the prize; Russia has appropriated the most of Central Asia, and is reaching for the rest; France has gathered in Tonquin and Annam, and now wants a continental boundary, something which England also wants after having appropriated to herself Burmah, Africa, and the islands of the sea have been generally taken possession of. Siam is simply a bone in the mouth of France and England. Poor Siam!

A Copying Pad. All that is necessary is to put a couple of ounces of good glue in warm water until it is thoroughly melted, then add twelve ounces of glycerine and a few drops of carbolic acid. Pour the mixture into a shallow pan and set it away to cool, and the next day it is ready for use.

FOR THE FAIR SEX.

AMONG the present generation of girls buttonhole making may almost be reckoned as a lost art. But with the revival of practical needlework there seems also to be a revival of desire for good buttonhole making. It is an art that can only be acquired by patient practice, and she who tries to hurry her work is sure to spoil the beauty of it. —[Housekeeper.]

WHAT CHINESE THINK OF LACING.

"A group of women in China," says the Louisville Recorder, "got hold of a fashion magazine from the United States. After examining it carefully for some moments, one of the number said to a missionary who had been talking to them against 'foot binding.' 'China woman pinch foot. You say China woman velly bad. Mollean woman pinch foot. Mollean woman pinch here,' saying her hand on her waist. 'Life here is not in foot. Mollean woman velly much more bad than China woman.' What would the missionary say? What could he, indeed?"

SUNSHADE FOR A BRUNETTE.

Especially suitable for a brunette is a sunshade in deep ripe corn colored silk. Inside it is a mass of tiny frills of satin-edged lisse, while outside there are three deep flounces of silk embroidered blonde, with a narrow, thick band of small scarlet Alpine poppies heading each frill. Another handsome and costly article is a silk veil with bouillon triangles in silk muslin, and crossed star fashion, with radiated rows of gathered ruching pinked out at the edges, in keeping with the flounce drooping all round. This has an ivory stock, enhanced with gold top and knobs, or it may be incrustated with stones. —[New York World.]

FANCY JEWELRY FOR RAGE.

The rage for fancy jewelry is on the increase. Flower and animal forms are set highly favored. All sorts of wild flowers are chosen for lace veils, hair ornaments and small buckles; sprays of valley lilies, single blossoms of hawthorn, pimpernel, chickweed, spigdwel, geranium and heather, in gold or silver set with gems. A row of daisies, alternately frosted gold with a pearl heart, or with diamond chips, clustered on silver makes pretty brooches and bangles. Flowers are also combined with insects. For instance, a tiny burrush in diamonds perched upon a twig of holly in enamel; a spider, with an opal-gem pearl of Labrador stone for his body, is clinging with his many diamond-set legs to a golden leaf. The newest thing in single flowers is the bee-orelled and the narcissus. The former may have its purselike cap covered with little sapphires, and the petals in diamonds, or vice versa. The narcissus is in plain burnished gold with brilliant in its center, or in diamonds and topazes. —[New York Advertiser.]

A BONANZA QUEEN'S JEWEL CASES.

Mrs. J. W. Mackay has two especially fine jewel cases. One, two feet square, is of solid silver, and holds the ornaments she wears and keeps for ordinary use. The other is of gold and three-quarters of a foot square. The top is entirely incrustated, and thickly studded with precious stones, some of which are over a carat in weight. This gold box is tufted with royal purple velvet. There are three trays, which are fastened in with a patent spring, of which Mrs. Mackay alone holds the secret. When the tiny golden key is turned to open the box, an alarm is started from a tiny alarm clock fitted into the inside, and thus is every precaution taken to guard the enormous value of the contents of Mrs. Mackay's "gold box," as it is always called. Her silver jewel case is less intricate, as well as less beautiful and costly. The lid and slides are heavily chased, and it opens with a secret spring. The trays have spring fastenings. The lining is of dark blue satin, so dark as to be almost black. The gold case has an outside case of thick black ebony, heavily clamped, and a top-handle of gold with which to carry it. The silver case has an ordinary Russia leather cover, with a silver top-handle. When traveling Mrs. Mackay's faithful little key can always be seen with one of these cases in either hand. He is always well armed. —[San Francisco Examiner.]

A FEMALE CRUOSE.

The recent earthquake and electrical disturbances at San Nicolas island, near Santa Barbara, Cal., has revived interest in the story of the old Indian woman who lived on a Crusoe life for the island for many years and who was finally removed to Santa Barbara only to die from the effects of unaccustomed civilization. The following sketch of this female Crusoe is from "Santa Barbara and Around There" by Edward Roberts. On the smallest island was enacted the tragedy of the "Lost Woman of San Nicolas," which at Santa Barbara is a familiar tale. The story begins with the removal of a number of Indians from San Nicolas in 1836. Just as they were embarking one of the women discovered that her child had been left behind. Returning for it, she was abandoned by her companions, who were obliged by a coming storm to set sail for the mainland. It was intended to return so soon as the weather permitted, but years passed for her, and the time was forgotten and left to her fate.

Twenty years later, a hunter named George Nidever of Santa Barbara, visited the island for otters. While there he determined to look for the woman. After careful search he found three huts made of whale ribs and brush, and from where they stood extended an open plain, in the center of which Nidever saw the object of his journey. The woman's dress was made of skins and feathers, and her hair hung in tangled masses from her bare head. When discovered, she was cutting blubber from a seal which she had killed, but on seeing her visitor she received him with every manifestation of delight, and readily accompanied him to his hut. Signs were made for her to enter it, and on her doing so, Nidever sailed for the bay, and brought his charge to Santa Barbara.

Her arrival there created great excitement and hundreds called at Nidever's house to see her. Although she could not have been more than fifty years old, she was gray-haired and emaciated. Her expression was one of blank ignorance and her skin was dry and wrinkled. Her language, strange as it may seem, considering the comparatively short time she had been lost, was unintelligible to all. Those who considered them, selves masters of every Indian tongue could not understand a word that she said. Owing to this fact the story of her hermitage was never known. What because of the child she returned from the boat to find on that fatal day in 1836 is a matter of pure conjecture. How long it lived and where it was buried were facts that could not be discovered. The woman appeared to have lost all human instincts, and to every question asked made no answer that could be understood. In three months after her rescue she died and was buried by the Mission fathers.

FASHION NOTES.

Real lace veils of the large old-fashioned size are coming into style again. White gloves have returned to favor for morning as well as evening wear. White kid and suede sailor hats are new this season, but straw takes the lead, with quills for trimming, while a more fancy sailor has roses around the crown and under the brim.

The thing just now in finger rings is to acquire three half hoop rings—one in diamonds, one in rubies and one in sapphires or emeralds—and wear them all on the same finger.

The coarser laces—point de venise, guipure and Irish point—are the most effective for trimming purposes.

Colored linen, with watered silk trimmings, is the newest fancy for the outgoing girl's suit.

Skirts are becoming just a little less triangular in shape, and evening bodices are perhaps not quite so much trimmed.

Moire, antique is coming to take the place of satin. It is used for gowns, wraps and as a trimming for anything really smart.

White muslin trimmed with Valenciennes lace, is coming in again for bridesmaids' gowns.

Serges, flannels and soft tweeds are de rigueur, but our climate is so varying that cooler weight materials are admissible. That called silk cloth is the very latest novelty. It is a soft and pliable woolen fabric with a loose weave, has little weight, but sufficient warmth.

What is called "white wool grenadine" is a new material that has appeared for evening dresses.

To clean white ostrich plumes dissolve four ounces of white soap in four pints of hot water. Make a lather and plunge the feathers into it, rubbing them well with the hands for five or six minutes. Wash out in clear, hot water and shake until dry.

Paris is advocating flesh-colored suede gloves for evening wear in place of the pure white so long worn.

A fine quality of ladies' cloth, which is now called habit cloth, is an extremely popular material. It comes in all the exquisite new shades and is used not only for tailor-made costumes, but for those that are much more elaborate.

The very newest form of skirt trimming consists of frills round the hips.

A revival of the long mousquetaire gloves for afternoon wear is said to be threatened.

Emerald green and rose color are the favorite combination in Paris at the present moment. There is a new and effective kind of coarse net in black or color, which is made up over a contrasting silk. In black it looks remarkably well over vieux rose or pure white.

Nothing looks more ladylike than white serge, and the girls one sees wearing it give one the impression that they feel the heat less than other folks.

A charming costume of this material was made in the plain skirt and coat fashion and worn with a cross over waistcoat of white silk.

White duck dresses made simply with plain skirts and open jackets look delightfully cool and easy. They are usually worn with colored silk blouses.

A bizarre effect was seen at a recent social when a woman in electric light was seen gleaming through a cake of ice placed before it in more than one corner of the room.

Orientalists at the Fair.

Among the young people who are visiting the Columbian Exposition this summer are a Japanese baby, three Chinese boys of from two to six years, a pikaniny from Dahomey, a dancing Soudanese baby, a little Bedouin girl who dances in the Arab encampment, a papoose or two in the Indian village, and a half-dozen Egyptian boys who labor the tiny gray donkeys in the Cairo Street. As the readers of Young People have already guessed, these boys and girls did not visit the fair to see the curious things in the wonderful white buildings, but to be a part of the show. They are there to be looked at, not to look, and they are among the most interesting of all the exhibits.

The black baby lives in the Dahomey village, which is supposed to look as if it had been picked up in Africa and set down in Chicago. In some respects it certainly does resemble the hot country about which Mr. Glave has told us during the past year. The ground is sandy enough and the sunshine hot enough for Sahara, and the reed-thatched huts which line the high board fence surrounding the village are uncouth enough to appear to satisfy the most enthusiastic explorer. In the middle of the village is a larger hut, open at the sides and covered with thatch, and in this hut the dwellers of the Dahomey village dance the w-dance of their native country every hour or two for the entertainment of the white people who stroll in to see them. All of these men and women are hideous in their gay calico clothing, with strings of teeth and strange-looking bits of stone and metal hanging about their necks and dangling from their arms and ears. But the pikaniny is as cunning as most other babies are. When I saw him he was sitting in a puddle of dirty water with no clothing on to get soiled, watching his mother and an older brother scouring two or three brass and silver rings with a bit of soap and a handful of sand. The little fellow wanted the rings to play with, and when he found that he could not have them, he set up a howl that sounded very much like a white boy of two years crying because he could not have a porcelain clock or a circus wagon to play with. —[Harper's Young People.]

Fortunes From Rags.

It is astonishing what immense sums rags pickers receive in the course of the day. The combings of women's hair sell at eighty cents a pound; this means $800 to the knights of the brook. "Merinos," as they are called, are another source of profit. These are the scraps of tailors and dressmakers and bring about $36,000 a year. The old bones are another source of profit and bring about $100,000 a year. The papers, orks and crusts of bread all go to different industries and bring a good deal of money. As for the collection bulletins, which are pasted upon the walls of Paris, they are much sought, especially immediately after an election, for the making of buttons. —[New York Herald.]

DESERTED VILLAGE RESTORED.

So It Utilized as a Summer Home for Poor City Children.

Among the hills of Berkshire County in western Massachusetts was a picturesque village known as Curtisville. It was not a town, but a village within the limits of Stockbridge, and only two and a half miles from the center of that historic town. Forty years ago there were about 1,000 inhabitants in this village. A church, hotel, stores, and many handsome private residences gave an inviting aspect to the village. The environment was very attractive. Springs abounded, and the small stream which flowed through the village turned the wheels of two or three large mills.

That such a village should have been deserted is one of the strange facts of modern times. Mining towns have in some instances been abandoned, either because the mines gave out or were closed. But in this village among the hills of Berkshire the great mills closed one day, and thereafter never was a wheel turned. The inhabitants, save a few farmers, depended on the manufacturing industry. They finally moved away, and for once an abandoned village remained, with empty churches, stores, hotels, and dwellings. What could be done with a deserted village which might never again be turned to manufacturing account?

The New York Tribune, which has gathered large sums of money every year for its "fresh-air fund," recently gave some account of what had been done to recover this village. A wealthy and childless New York lawyer had passed through that abandoned village many times during vacation seasons, wondering what could be done in the way of rehabilitation. He found that the right of occupation could be turned over to him and he could even buy the dwellings for a nominal sum. The village would make a capital place for the poor children sent out from New York in midsummer by means of the fresh-air fund. The man, who had lost his only daughter, would do something in her name. The abandoned village is to be rejuvenated and filled with children for a part of the year. St. Helen's home is to have dormitories, swimming baths, flower gardens, a gymnasium, and everything that can make boys and girls town attractive.

A Beauty Manufacturer. "Can you really make a dimple in twenty minutes?" a reporter asked the "doctor" who has been notifying society ladies of his ability to make three dimples an hour at $5 a dimple. It was in a big brick building on Market street and the "doctor" was a very polite man.

"Dimples? Oh, yes, ma'am, very easy and painless, I assure you. Now, for making a dimple in a chin such as yours, where one is already started by nature, the operation is very simple indeed. I just make a slight incision where the natural dimple is beginning to show, cover the place with some prepared plaster and then treat with electricity for two or three days and when at the end of that time the plaster is removed a perfect, handsome dimple will be found.

"The treatment where a dimple in the cheek is desired is different only as regards the operation; but on account of almost constant movement of the muscles the healing is a little slower and requires more frequent treatment with electricity, which costs $10 instead of $5. Yes, I make a good many dimples."

The "doctor" explained that nose-straightening went with dimple making, just as hair cutting went with shaving, and the business also included mouth-ensmalling. He remarked that any one coming into the world blessed with a turned-up nose or a large mouth was not, in this age of progress, excusable for letting it remain in its deformed state. He could reduce the mouth from a large size to the merest rosebud or straighten a turned-up nose until it looked severely classical. —San Francisco Examiner.

We May Have a Transatlantic Telephone.

William H. Preece, F. R. S., of the London Institution of Electrical Engineers, has devised a new form of cable, which he says, will probably quadruple the rate of cabling across the Atlantic. If this is so, and a cable of such efficiency can be produced, the much-talked-of transatlantic telephone may yet be forthcoming. Mr. Preece, in his address before the institution of engineers, was enthusiastic in favor of the scheme, and that it will be brought forward is apparent from the fact that the English Government has made a grant of $2,500,000 to develop long distance, telephony, and a part of this sum is to be devoted to experiments tending to carrying out the scheme of bringing the two continents within speaking distance of each other. Whether this will be accomplished in the near future, however, is a question. It is something, however, to know that work is being done in this line. Professor S. P. Thompson is to read a paper on "Ocean Telephony" at the electrical congress at the World's Fair. The results of the British tests have been carefully withheld from publication.

Concrete. Concrete, as a material for engineering works, has until within comparatively recent years, been chiefly confined to harbor works, but lately it has been used in the construction of railway works both at home and abroad. The advantage of employing this material is apparent in districts where the absence of good building stone or clay for the manufacture of bricks makes the cost of masonry or brick structures very great.

To Destroy Ants.

Families troubled with ants can get rid of them as follows: Take a medium sized bath sponge, wet it and wring it out; sprinkle about a teaspoonful of the white sugar on the sponge and work it between the hands in such a manner as to force the sugar into it; put the sponge in the place infested by the ants, and every two or three hours pour boiling water on the sponge after playing it in a basin.

"Jack Brown and his sister Emily are twins aren't they?" "They are now, but they won't be when Jack's thirty."

THUGI SPLASH! WHIZ!

An Exciting Ride on a Stage Coach in Kansas Early Days.

The following graphic description of an attack upon a stage coach, by Indians, in the days before Kansas was as well settled as she is now, will give the reader a fair idea of the exciting experience of travelers in that region.

"Did you see that?" A stage coach which has been pushing along the overland trail in Western Kansas is suddenly pulled up by the driver, who rises in his seat, points to the broken ground on the right and ahead, and turns to the two outside passengers to repeat:

"Did you see that? That's the Indians ambushed in the dry ravine ahead!" Two passengers on top—five inside—seven in all, but two of them are women—wives of army officers. Five men with guns and pistols. The driver won't count unless a bullet brings down one of his horses.

"Ready inside, then?" he asks. "Tell them women-folks to crouch down on the floor and keep quiet. Throw open their doors and fasten 'em back. One of you better come up here. Now, then, that may be ten or fifteen, or that may be fifty or sixty of the varmints. They'll make their points, in course. They'll make the rush just when the road bends to the right. They'll come whooping, and yellin' like lunatics broke loose, but don't let the noise rattle you. I'm going to put my horses on the dead run and keep 'em going at that, and I expect the rest of you to do the shouldin'. Everybody all ready? Then here goes!"

Two women crouching on the floor of the coach praying to God—five pale-faced men with teeth hard set, gripping their rifles and determined to make a good fight of it. With a shake of the lines the driver breaks the four horses into a run, and then braces his feet and looks straight ahead. The spirited animals will be terror-stricken at the first yell and run away. He must keep the coach in the road or a wipe-out is certain.

"Yes, the Indians are there—half a hundred of them. They have been in ambush for an hour. This is the first stage to the West for three days; it will be the last for a fortnight. It is another Indian outbreak and the Smoky Hill section to find mutilated corpses at every relay-house for 100 miles. The band in the road is reached, and of a sudden fifty ponies rush out of the dry ravines, which spread out there like the fingers of a human hand, and fifty Indian warriors whoop, shriek, and yell at the top of their voices. They fire their rifles and discharge their arrows as they charge, but it is a wild fusillade.

"Steady, now," calls the driver, but keeping his eyes on his flying horses. "My little trick has knocked 'em out. They'll yell to swing in behind us, and you fellows want to take it cool and not waste your lead. Geewhew, but ain't them horses cuttin' out the pace?"

The Indians fire at the men on the roof—they urge their ponies to overtake the swaying, bounding, flying coach—they yell like devils let loose. Crack! crack! crack! go their rifles. A pony falls—a warrior throws up his hands and tumbles to the earth—the driver gets a firmer grip on the lines and mutters:

"Splendid! splendid! Couldn't task 'em to do better! If them fellers inside has got sand we'll pull through!" The warriors were gaining. With a sudden rush the mob parted to twice the stage right and left and to get at the horses. Then from the open door rifles and revolvers cracked—from the women crouched on the floor with faces buried in their hands came shrieks and wails of despair.

"It's a straight run now, and the Lord help us!" whispered the driver, as he shifted all the lines to his left hand and drew his revolver and opened fire. "Take that, ye painted devils! Down ye go, ye spotted cayuses! That's the last error you'll ever shute, my yella' buck! Revolvers is the thing, boys—down with yer rifles and use them barkers!"

"Oh, God! have pity on us!" prayed the women between their sobs, but the white-faced men firing through the open doors over their heads heard them not. Thud! splash! whizz! came bullet and arrow. There was the jangle of breaking glass—splinters flew about—drops of blood fell upon the upturned faces and burned like fire. All at once pandemonium ceased and silence reigned. The Indians had abandoned the attack. On that three mile stretch lay a dozen dead and wounded bucks—more than that number of dead and wounded ponies.

"Whoa! my beauties!" called the driver, as he laid aside his pistol and separated the lines. "These are four is over, and ye needn't throw any more shoes off. Easy, now—whoa! How is it with you fellows back there?" As the frightened horses began to slacken their pace he cast a swift glance over his shoulder. The three men were lying down on the roof. Half a mile further on he brought the horses to a halt and called to those inside. A man with blood on his face and hands stepped out and asked:

"Are they gone?" "Yes—licked 'em in a far fout. Anybody hurt down there?" "Women all right—men all wounded. How is it up there?" "What, horses? Lemme see. This feller's dead—'other one only hard hit, I guess. That'll do. That's a heap better'n the seven who was clean wiped out Monday afternoon. Git in and chirp up the women. We've passed the danger point, and its only two miles to No. 4. Somebody must have bin prayin' to God to pull 'us' through, and He's dun it in purty good shape."

Paper Hangers' Paste.

A good paper hangers' paste is made of four pounds of fine wheaton flour mixed with a small quantity of cold water, thoroughly stirred; two ounces of powdered alum are then added, and when dissolved a gallon of boiling water. When cool it may be thinned as desired with cold water and used.

MARIE.—Frank told me last night I was the only girl he ever loved. KITTIE.—Pshaw, he was engaged to me a month ago. MARIE.—Well, what's that got to do with love?

WHY IS IT?

Philosophy Cannot Explain Individual Likes and Dislikes.

All the philosophers who have thought and studied and pondered since the world began have not been able to say or explain, why we like some people and places and things and dislike others. They have talked very learnedly about heredity and idiosyncrasies and the personal equation and the convolutions of the gray matter of the brain, but after all they are reduced to what we call a child's reason, that is "because." This matter of likes and dislikes is a very interesting and amusing study. It presents this advantage over most problems, that the student may spend a lifetime in the contemplation and examination of his own likes and dislikes without having to seek any further for an object-lesson, which is manifestly a matter of great value to one of an inquisitive turn of mind. He may put himself to all the whys and wherefores that he could address to collective humanity, and from that optome of the race he will learn as much, or as little, as from all the men and women who have been in the world since Adam.

No one can have escaped interrogating himself on this subject. He finds himself in a place, for example, which seems an earthly paradise, with everything to appeal to the finer, nobler, higher emotions of his nature, and yet he does not like it. The next day he is in some place vastly inferior in every respect, and yet he feels that sense of content and self-satisfaction which we all recognize as the most pleasurable of all emotions. Can he resist asking himself why? As with places, so it is with people. One makes a new acquaintance, man or woman, endowed with abundant, noble and lovable qualities, universally respected and admired and a general favorite, and yet for some reason the responsive chord is not struck and no liking follows. With strange inconsistency—that is, it would be strange were it not so common—we meet, on the other hand, persons who seem to have nothing in common with ourselves, who are reputed to be possessed of no charms and graces of manner and no brilliancy of intellect, and yet we like them and continue to like them; and then, more than ever, we ask ourselves why.

The Kindly Elephant.

"Talking of elephants," the bookstore habitue said to a Louisville Courier-Journal man, "there is an elephant story that has been told in our family ever since I was a boy which illustrates the sagacity of the beast, as well as his remarkable loyalty to friendship. The incident happened over in New Albany, in the early '30's or thereabouts. At that time the circuses were rather small affairs—one elephant, a few animals, and some horses generally constituting the entire outfit—and when they came to town the men were always entertained at an inn which was on Main street, where the old DePauw house now stands; while the elephant, cages, and horses were housed in the livery stable in the rear in the alley. The hostler of the stable, Cooper by name, though an intemperate fellow, was a genial host to the circus animals, and a great friendship existed between himself and My Lord, the elephant. He was kind to the beast, which, in its clumsy way, manifested a great regard for the hostler.

"On the occasion, which lives in local history, the circus had arrived and was winding its way through the narrow alley into the stable when prone on the ground in the middle of the alley was discovered Cooper, the hostler, in a drunken sleep. The horses passed around him, but as the elephant came shambling along, everybody who witnessed the episode expected to see the hostler stepped upon and crushed. When the big beast reached the limp form he stopped short, inspected the obstacle, and then wound his trunk around it. The crowd shuddered; surely now he would throw the man and dash him to pieces on the stones. Cheers went up, however, when the elephant placed the unconscious Cooper carefully on his back, with the evident intention of taking care of a friend in distress. He bore him safely into the livery stable and tenderly deposited him in a safe place among the hay."

The Homing Pigeon.

The numerous experiments made by balloonists have proved that pigeons are incapable of flying at any great height. Birds thrown out at 6,000 moderate height of 300 meters pigeons liberated by the balloonist Gaston Tissandier approached the earth in a spiral course. It is evident, hence, that they are not guided wholly by sight. To bring a point 300 miles distant within the range of vision, it would be necessary to ascend nearly 20,000 meters. The carrier pigeon, starting on such a journey, must consequently start with faith in the unseen.

As regards speed, thirty or thirty-five miles an hour is considered a fair average in good weather. The greater the distance, the smaller the probability of the prompt return of the bird. At a distance of say 100 miles, almost all birds return safely if the weather is favorable, but at distances of 400 or 500 miles it is impossible to reckon confidently on the bird's return. It appears curious, but it is a well established fact, that as the bird nears its home its speed is accelerated.

Largely Imaginative.

An expert ventriloquist declares that his art is largely imaginative, as there is no possibility of throwing the voice to a distance. Most of the old stories of his tricks are fiction. What passes for ventriloquism consists simply of mimicry and facial mobility. The performer must be some distance from his audience, or he is powerless. Whenever he wishes to make them believe that his voice sounds at a distance, he merely changes it, and indicates the direction for their imagination to take. He can deceive them sideways, upward, downward, or backward, but he never undertakes to produce the effect of a speaker at their rear. To a listener close by, no ventriloquist can be in the least deceptive.

A FEMALE CRUSOE.

The recent earthquake and electrical disturbances at San Nicolas island, near Santa Barbara, Cal., has revived interest in the story of the old Indian woman who led a Crusoe life on the island for many years and who was finally removed to Santa Barbara only to die from the effects of unaccustomed civilization. The following sketch of this female Crusoe is from "Santa Barbara and Around There" by Edward Roberts:

On the smallest island was enacted the tragedy of the "Lost Woman of San Nicolas," which at Santa Barbara is a familiar tale. The story begins with the removal of a number of Indians from San Nicolas in 1836. Just as they were embarking one of the women discovered that her child had been left behind. Returning for it, she was abandoned by her companions, who were obliged by a coming storm to set sail for the mainland. It was intended to return so soon as the weather permitted, but years passed away and the woman in time was forgotten and left to her fate.

Twenty years later, a hunter named George Nidever of Santa Barbara, visited the island for otters. While there he determined to look for the woman. After careful search he found three huts made of whale ribs and brush, and from

After careful search he found three huts made of whale-ribs and brush, and from where they stood extended an open plain, in the center of which Nidever saw the object of his journey. The woman's dress was made of skins and feathers, and her hair hung in tangled masses from her bare head. When discovered, she was cutting blubber from a seal which she had killed, but on seeing her visitor she received him with every manifestation of delight, and readily accompanied him to his boat. Signs were made for her to enter it, and on her doing so, Nidever sailed for the bay, and brought his charge to Santa Barbara.

Her arrival there created great excitement and hundreds called at Nidever's house to see her. Although she could not have been more than fifty years old, she was gray-haired and emaciated. Her expression was one of blank ignorance and her skin was dry and wrinkled. Her language, strange as it may seems considering the comparatively short time she had been lost, was unintelligible to all. Those who considered themselves masters of every Indian tongue could not understand a word that she said. Owing to this fact the story of her hermitage was never known. What became of the child she returned from the boat to find on that fatal day in 1836 is a matter of pure conjecture. How long it lived and where it was buried were facts that could not be discovered. The woman appeared to have lost all human instincts, and to every question asked made no answer that could be understood. In three months after her rescue she died and was buried by the Mission fathers.
