THE ELECTIONS.

Since our last we have received the complete vote of the parish, with which we have filled up the blanks then left in our tables. The figures given last week were official, though the vote was not complete—the returns from the first and second precincts not having arrived within the time prescribed by law, and most of the votes in the fourth being discarded by the Sheriff on account of informality. By the annexed tables it will be seen that the result is in no way changed by these occurrences, and in some instances the breach between the candidates is even widened.

In the parish of St. Martin Hunt's majority over Davis is 278, Hawthorn's over Greneaux 155; King's over Marks 167, Lamson's over Carrigan 152; for Senator, Judge Moore's majority over Zephirine Broussard is 145; for the House Messrs. Briant, Heard and Etie are elected. J. A. Deblanc was elected Sheriff without opposition; V. A. Eournot was elected Clerk of the District Court by a vote of 172 over Bienvenu, and E. M. Olivier Recorder by 480 over Emile Hebert; John G. Harry was elected Assessor, and G. D. Judica Coroner.

The result in St. Landry is as follows:

For Congress, Smith 634, Jones 505; for Auditor, King 992, Marks 512; for Treasurer, Hawthorn 946, Greneaux 562; for Superintendent of Public Education, Lamson 925, Carrigan 564, for the State Senate, T. M. Anderson 853, B. A. Martel 686; for Representatives, O. A. Guidry 1106, J. D. Gardiner 1068, A. Dejean 1061, E. N. Cullom 1047, scattering 487; for Sheriff, J. B. David 972, T. C. Anderson 581; for Clerk of District Court, A. Garrigue 1198, G. E. Louallier 338; for Recorder, Yves D'Avy 586, no regular opposition; for Coroner, Cyrus Thompson 564, scattering 260; P. Mouille was elected Assessor.

In New Orleans the general result of the voting is very different from what was expected—so much so, indeed, as to create the strongest presumption that gross frauds were perpetrated at some of the precincts. In that portion of the city below Canal street, comprised within the First Congressional District, the democratic candidate (Dunbar) obtained a majority of about 1900 votes over the independent candidate, Charles Gayarre. That part within the Second Congressional District gave Davis, the democratic candidate, a majority of 558 over Hunt—a result very different from what was anticipated. Greneaux's majority for State Treasurer was 2742, and Marks' for Auditor 2906. In the Legislative contest the democrats carried everything pretty much their own way, electing the Senators, and 22 out of 27 Representatives. In their local offices they were also successful—electing their Sheriff, Mandeville Marigny, by a majority of 2490 over the whig candidate, Freret, and of 2130 over Freret and Carman combined; also, their Coroner by a majority of 1481 over his whig opponent, all the Assessors, all the Tax Collectors but one, all the District Court Clerks, five out of seven Justices of the Peace, and a majority of the Constables.

In West Baton Rouge, Pond's majority over Perkins, democratic candidate, is 58; for Treasurer, Hawthorn leads Greneaux 65 votes; and for Auditor, King leads Marks 66. Johnston is elected Senator by 154 majority, and Favrot to the House without opposition. In East Baton Rouge Perkins leads Pond 80 votes. For State Treasurer the vote is very close, being 465 for Hawthorn and 460 for Greneaux; for Auditor, King leads Marks 88 votes.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.—Since our last we have received from the American publishers, L. Scott & Co., of New York, their reprint of this monthly, for October. Its contents are very interesting—more than usually so, if possible, in the general interest of this side of the Atlantic. In the foreground is a review of "Uncle Tom's Cabin;" or rather the literary characteristics of its author, in which the reviewer, while he speaks of Mrs. Stowe's genius in high terms, points out many faults in her as an author. Among others he says that her mind is frequently so intent on the purpose of her book, that she does not give herself time to develop or mature her happiest conceptions. We extract the reviewer's own words:

She horrifies her reader along with her, breathless. The flight and pursuit of poor Eliza and her child—the incidents selected to heighten the interest in their fate—the introduction of Marks and Tom Loker, and their interview with Haley—their encounter at the rocky pass with George and his wife and child, are, in parts, worthy of the pencil of Sir Walter Scott; but it must be added, that that consummate master of his art would never have drawn up suddenly in his exciting course, to interpolate drivelling allusions to Austria and the Hungarians, Poland, Ireland, and England—or tame and even irritating moralisings at the very crisis of the adventure, as is but too often the case with Mrs. Stowe.

Farther on he says: It is evident that the writings of one English author at least of the present day have made a deep impression on Mrs. Stowe. This is Mr. Dickens, with whom, indeed, she has much in common; but he must not attribute it to mere gallantry, if we express our opinion that there are parts of Uncle Tom's Cabin which he never can surpass, which he never has surpassed. She probes human nature every where as tenderly and truly as he; her sympathies are as keen and subtle, her spirit is as generous as his; her perception of the humorous as quick and vivid as his own. She shows also his—so to speak—structural faults; which, in a general way, we may indicate by saying, that condensation and directness of course would greatly improve the compositions of both. A lively reader hates to be detained on his way, in order to have traced out for him the source and operation of the motives by which characters are actuated. He likes to be given credit for a capacity to do that for himself. It occurs to us, that had Mr. Dickens passed his life among the same scenes as Mrs. Stowe, making allowance for certain special circumstances affecting the latter, he would have produced a work very similar, in both its faults and excellencies, to Uncle Tom's Cabin. That she is a reader, and doubtless an admirer of his, is abundantly evident; for she has closely copied his manner, and that not in its most favorable manifestations, but rather the more obvious mannerisms.

Another little mannerism acquired from the same quarter is the use, in grave composition, of the colloquial, "can't," "won't," "didn't," "couldn't," &c. These are little bits of vulgar slipshod which are sad eyesores to readers of taste; and we cannot for the life of us see what end is gained by introducing them into black and white, except, perhaps, in fitting dialogue. We have already intimated a considerable want of tact in Mrs. Stowe, twitting aside, as it were, her reader when in full course of following her breathless, to listen to some very serious and commonplace moralisings.

One of Mrs. Stowe's greatest faults, says the reviewer, that—

While the reader—perhaps herself palpitating mother, almost blinded by her tears—is flying along with the deft fugitive and her child, hah! she is rested, to listen to twaddle. Forgive us, dear Mrs. Stowe, if we gently reproach you for thus mar your own beautiful narrative, and giving English mothers credit for being so obtuse and phlegmatic as to be unable to realize all these thoughts and feelings as they are hastening along with you! And there are very many such instances of defective workmanship. A considerable portion of this consists of preaching—always, doubtless, perfectly orthodox and evangelical, but smacking too strongly—all she forgives us of the conventional twag.

The article in question occupies fifty-one pages of the Magazine, and a hasty sketch is all we can give. Suffice it to say that the writer is as lavish in the praise of Mrs. Stowe as he is unsparring in his criticisms on portions of her work.

A Female Crusoe.—A correspondent of the Newburyport Herald, writing from Santa Barbara, California, under date of September 11, 1853, relates the following singular incident:

We have now in Santa Barbara a great curiosity—an Indian woman who has lived for eighteen years alone upon the Island of San Nicholas, a small island about 45 miles from this place, during which time she has not seen the face of a human being. This island was once peopled by a tribe of Indians, to whom the north-west tribes were hostile. To preserve the remnant of this tribe from destruction, as well as with a view to christianize them, the Padres induced them to come to the main land eighteen years ago. After they were all on board the vessel sent for them, this woman swam ashore to look for her child, which had been left; and a storm springing up in the night, the vessel was compelled to put to sea; on returning, she could not be found. She was known to be alive by those who at times visited the island for the purpose of hunting otters, from the marks of fires and from foot-prints in the sand.

On being approached the other day she manifested much joy which she betrayed by signs of the most significant character, and at once commenced packing up her few articles of furniture. Whether the sounds that she uttered are words or not has not yet been ascertained. The man who found her is familiar with five or six Indian languages, but he was unable to understand a single expression; it is more than probable that she has forgotten her native tongue entirely. Her clothing consisted of the skins of some wild animals, and her food has been shell-fish, seals, and a small bulbous root, similar in appearance to an onion, but wholly tasteless.

The needles with which she stitched her garments are made of the sharp bones of a fish. She had two hooks made of a bent nail and sharpened by friction upon a stone. Her lines were beautifully twisted from the sinews of some animal, probably a species of fox which abounds on the island.

Her age, as near as can be estimated, is about 55 or 60; her features are quite masculine; her hair of the color of dark brown, and very fine. This is very remarkable for an Indian; their hair, you know, is always jet black and coarse. In some future letter I will give you a more extended account of this marvel of the 19th century. She is truly an object for the reflection of the philosopher and the inspection of the curious.

Benton on Removal from Office.—Mr. Benton, in one of the chapters of his forthcoming history, thus expresses himself on removals from office:

I consider sweeping removals, as now practised by both parties, a great political evil in our country, injurious to individuals, to the public service, to the purity of elections, and to the harmony and union of the people. Certainly, no individual has a right to an office, no one has an estate of property in a public employment; but when a mere ministerial worker in a subordinate station has learned its duties by experience, and approved his fidelity by his conduct, it is an injury to the public service to exchange him for a novice, whose only title to the place may be a political badge or a partisan service. It is exchanging experience for experiment, tried ability for untried, and destroying its reward. To the party displaced it is an injury, having become a proficient in that business, expecting to remain in it during good behaviour, and finding it difficult, at an advanced age, and with fixed habits, to begin a new career in some new walk of life. It converts elections into scrambles for office, and degrades the government into an office for rewards and punishments, and divides the people of the Union into two adverse parties—each in its turn, and as it becomes dominant, to strip and prescribe the other. Our government is a union. We want a united people as well as United States—united for benefits as well as for burdens, and in feeling as well as in compact; and this cannot be while one-half (each in its turn) excludes the other from all share in the administration of the government.

In Mississippi, the democratic State ticket and the democratic candidate for Congress for the State at large have been elected by from five to eight thousand majority. The democratic anti-Foote majority in the Legislature on joint ballot will not be less than twenty-five.

Our parish is perfectly healthy, and the weather delightful.

ORIGINAL POETRY.

[For the Planters' Banner.]
MONODY ON THE DEATH OF THE
Hon. Daniel Webster,
BY DR. J. M. SMITH, OF PATTERSONVILLE.

The time has been—will it return no more?
When Sorrow wept and Pity could deplore
With tear unbidden by a single sigh
Which Grief and Malice meanly laid aside
The illustrious dead and all the love sublime
Their lives imprinted on the shores of Time.
Some souls there be, of finer, nobler mould,
Not quite degraded by the touch of gold,
Who still can shed the unpolished tear
O'er the pale ashes of a lost compeer;
Nor seek to stab with paralytic blow
The shrouded virtues of a slumbering foe,
But leave that word to dignity the late
Of paltry wranglers for the spoils of State.
Who contemplate with wringings of distress
Such awful contrast of their littleness;
And who, just erept from out their holes and caves,
Rejoice that greater men are in their graves;
But lest perchance their cerebrous prove too thin,
File lies and calumny to keep them in;
Beware! ye few, who, still at Faction's head,
Withhold detection of the mighty dead!
Tremble! repeat! or maimous of the hour
Will hurl you toppling from your heights of power!
And teach to know, and spurn you till you feel,
Beneath the mangle of their iron heel,
That 'tis that late and pitiful respect
Of spleen and rancor, their abhor'd delight,
Against the great and good whom they condemn,
Marks you for vengeance equally with them.
Then learn in time, ere you are done to death,
To mix that little modicum of breath
Which appellation from the air you draw,
"In scorn of Nature's violated law."
With such equivalents of blackening hate
As will their vengeance fully gorge and sate!

But oh, ye brood! too loathsome to despise!
Who murder first, then blacken o'er with lies—
Who still preserve, in blood congeal'd, the rod
Which scour'd to death the spotless Son of God,
Will it, alas! as long as earth endures
Your savage hatred of the good and pure!
But him whose noble virtues none I sing,
Who all had suffer'd to the mortal sting
Which all of woman born are doom'd to know,
And pure or vile alike must undergo,
Protecting angels bear on wings sublime
Above the storms and ravages of time; [tame
And tho' with fierceness more than death could
You burn to brand his just and spotless fame—
Poor envious snail! that trail your venom o'er
Each limb and feature—brighter than before,
The fair proportions shine transparent through,
With added lustre and a livelier hue—
Champion of virtue—bulwark of the land—
Long had he stood, but could no longer stand,
Then yell! proclaim! to the admiring throng,
Carnage and plunder! Country, right or wrong!
Still crush and trample the defenceless down,
To swell your gains and gild your high renown;
And when ye've robb'd the wretches of their bread,
Pursue them still, with still relentless tread—
The old and young, the matron and the maid,
Drive from your borders to the desert shade,
Where hungry wolves, your natural allies,
With reeking jaws, red tongues and bloodshot eyes,
Of what yourselves so nobly had begun!
Fulfill your mission, and dispel the doubt
Which foolish seers and sages have held out:
That lust, and war, and rapine should give place
To love in hearts of all the human race!
Yes,—your base, ignoble task, to prove
That all the light that shines from Heaven above,
And light of science, reason, nature love,
Glowing concentrate on man's hell-born will,
Has left that human savage savage still.

* The press of the country are announcing—the progressions in terms of approbation—the forcible expulsion, en masse, of all the remaining Mexican population by the citizens—that is, the progressive citizens (for these Mexicans were citizens also) of the county of Matagorda, in Texas, beyond their borders, there to meet whatever late destination and accident may allot them. These "progressive" Americans, representatives of their fathers, or other antecedent representatives, were invited by the Mexican nation to come and receive, as a gratuity, a part of the fertile lands of Texas; and when they had strengthened themselves upon such a foundation, by the possession of a part thus given them, they rose and, when the latter, stripped of all the means of subsistence, began, some of them, to swell, as St. John the Divine himself (the best of the saints, I believe) would, and as Dr. Paley in his Moral Philosophy says by implication would have a right to, these remarkably progressive (but not remarkably grateful) gentlemen drove them indiscriminately into the wilderness! I speak not now of the common run, who with lively feel have left countries for all countries' good, but of the dis-tinct enlightened and elevated among them; and I would willingly lay a wager to any amount at my command, that no sentiment of humanity, the most subdued and negative of that whole catalogue of merely negative virtues, could be propounded before any dozen of them promiscuously taken, where their interests were at all concerned, that would not be put down by acclamation.

That Texas is a hot upon civilization—an incubus upon weeping humanity; and if God Almighty had not seen fit, for inscrutable reasons, to suspend the miraculous demonstrations of his anger, he would sink it beneath such another deluge of fire, and under such another lake of blackness and bitterness as consumed and overwhelmed the ancient "cities of the plain."

An Important Question Settled.—The accounting officers of the Treasury made a decision in accordance with the principles stated below, as follows, viz:

Mr. D., in Europe, who owned United States stocks, constituted K. & Sons, of New York, his attorneys, to receive the dividends of interest on his stocks, with power of substitution. The attorneys exercised this last mentioned power by the substitution of A. Afterwards K. died. The question arose, whether the death of K. revoked the power of A., the substituted attorney? The Court of Appeals in Kentucky decided in 1837 that—

"The authority of a sub-agent is not affected by the death of an agent from whom he received the appointment."

Another Letter from Judge Bronson.

MONDAY, OCT. 31, 1853.

Sir—If you had been content, in your letter of the 22d inst., with announcing my removal from office, it would have been the end of our correspondence on that subject. But as you have attempted to assign reasons for the preceding, I have something to say in reply.

You deny the right of the Collector to act without instructions from your Department, in any case. This doctrine is entirely new; for in much the larger part of the business of the Customhouse the Collector is guided by the revenue laws, and is always acted without instructions from the Secretary of Treasury. It is only in special cases where the law is of doubtful construction, or the duties of the Collector have been fully prescribed by law, and where the Secretary has a dispensing power, that he has been authorized to issue instructions to Collectors. And none of these cases have anything to do with the appointment of officers of the Customs. On that head the rights and duties of both Secretary and Collector have been prescribed by Congress, and neither can control the other when acting in his appropriate sphere.

If, as you appear to suppose, the Collector can do nothing without instructions from your Department, the business which is now transacted in the Customhouse in a single hour could not be accomplished in a month. You have evidently set too high an estimate upon the extent of your powers.

The reason which you have assigned for this sweeping claim of authority is as extraordinary as the claim itself. Your words are: "Where the Department is not expressly empowered to give instructions to subordinates, it has authority to do so, as inherent in the power to remove a refractory officer." Now, as I read the Constitution, the Secretary of the Treasury has no power to remove a Collector, however refractory he may be. The power of removal, as well as of appointment, is vested in the President. You will do well, therefore, to look for some reason than the one you have assigned for an unlimited authority over Collectors in the selection of their agents.

You think it singular that a gentleman of my legal acquirements and experience should fall into the error of assuming that the Collector appoints the various persons employed in the Customhouse—some with the approval of the Secretary, and some on the sole authority of the Collector. Singular as they may appear to you, it is the course which has uniformly been pursued since the foundation of the Government. Weighers, measurers, gaugers and inspectors have been appointed by the Collector, with the approval of the Secretary; while clerks, porters, barge-men, laborers, and others, have been appointed by the Collector alone. It has not only been so under all former Secretaries of the Treasury, but during your own time. All my clerks, porters, cartmen, laborers, &c., have been appointed without consulting you in any way, and you never intimated a doubt about the propriety of this course until you deemed it expedient to interfere in the local politics of New York.

Still you insist that the clerks and other agents of the Collector derive appointment and authority as public officers from the Secretary of the Treasury alone. The reason you assign for this new and extravagant claim will show that it is wholly without any legal foundation. You place it upon the Constitution of the United States, which provides that "Congress may, by law, vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they may think proper—in the heads of Departments." You then add, that "Congress has not attempted, nor if it had, could it have effected any modification of this provision of the Constitution." And hence you conclude that the appointment is in the Secretary. It is readily granted that Congress has not, and cannot, modify the Constitution. But still your argument amounts to no more than this—because Congress may by law vest the appointment of certain officers in the Secretary of the Treasury, and Congress has not modified this Constitutional provision, therefore the Secretary has the power of appointment. In other words—because Congress may, if it pleases, confer a power on the Secretary, and Congress has done nothing on the subject, therefore the Secretary has the power. Such is the logic of your letter.

I have thus far assumed that you are right in supposing that the clerks, porters, laborers, &c., in the Customhouse, are public officers within the meaning of the Constitution, in relation to appointments. But, in truth, they are mere agents of the Collector, to aid in the discharge of the duties which the law has imposed upon him. They are the hands by which he works, and are no more officers in the sense of the Constitution than are soldiers and sailors in the army and navy. They have never been treated or mentioned by Congress as officers appointed by the Collector or any one else; but only as persons employed by the Collector. I hazard nothing in saying that the claim which you now set up has not a shadow of foundation, either in the law of the land, or in any former practice of the Government.

You speak of "unwarrantable assumption," and a "manifest spirit of insubordination," on my part, as a ground for the removal. But you have been wholly unable to show that I assumed anything beyond my just rights, or that I was unwilling to act in obedience to your instructions, in all cases where the law had given you authority to direct. You must allow me to add, that insubordination in office does not necessarily prove inferiority; and, between gentlemen, the relation of superior and subordinate confers no right on the one to use imperious language, and imposes no duty on the other to surrender his legal rights.

You complain that the remarks in my former letter impugn your motives. I did no more than state facts—facts which you have not attempted to controvert, and then said, "As to the motive of this movement let others judge." If your motives have been impugned it is because the facts themselves, and not any words of mine, create the impeachment.

Nothing in your letter has amazed me more than what you say about my selecting Freesoilers for office. No man can read what was said in your first communication, without seeing that you called on me to appoint a larger portion of Freesoilers, or persons who had left the democratic party and followed Mr. Van Buren on the slavery question in 1848, than I had before done. You spoke of the party as being divided into different sections, and complained that my appointments had been generally made from that portion of the party to which I adhered. You were not speaking of the recent division at Syracuse, for I had made no nominations after that event happened. You were speaking of the different sections as they had existed in the past. You knew very well that I adhered to that portion of the party which had not deserted the national standard in 1848; and no one can fail to see that you intended I should give a larger share of the offices to the Freesoil section and its allies. And now you think it worthy of "animadversion" that I have "selected Freesoilers for office."

You cannot escape under a quibble. I did not inform you, as you now find it convenient to state, that I had "selected Freesoilers for office," meaning persons who are now Freesoilers. On the contrary, I spoke of appointing none but "sound democrats," sincerely attached to the principles of the party, and firm supporters of the National Administration. I spoke of "different sections" of the party, just as you had spoken of them; and told you, not that "Freesoilers," but that "the Freesoil section" had got its full share of the offices. Your "animadversion" derives all its force from "misrepresenting the language of your adversary."

More might be said; but if, in reviewing this branch of the subject, you can maintain your self respect, nothing that I can say would be likely to reach you.

Having, as I trust, shown that the reasons which you have assigned are utterly worthless, it now remains to inquire what was the real ground of removal. It was not until after the recent break in the party at Syracuse, that you found any cause of complaint against me. After the party had been resolved into its original elements, without any agency of mine, and by means which I could not approve—after I had been compelled to choose between the two sections, and had very naturally adhered to my old associations with the National Democrats—after the paper which professed, without rebuke, to speak the sentiments of the Cabinet had taken the side of the Freesoil section, and denounced as traitors those who adhered to the principles which brought the Administration into power—then it was that you first discovered that I had not been sufficiently favorable to the Freesoil section.

Can any man of sense and candor entertain a doubt concerning the motive for your action? I think not. You intended to take ground against the National Democrats and throw the weight of the Administration into the opposite scale. The men who had never swerved from the principles of the party, but had stood fast by the Union when it was in danger, were to be borne down by the strong arm of power; and because the Collector occupied a place of some importance, the blow was to be rendered the more significant by making it fall on him. You then wrote me an insulting letter, and placed the copy in the hands of an officer of the customs, who whispered it about and finally gave it to the press as a means of annoying me. Whether you intended the officer should so act is more than I can say; but so far as I have learned, he still enjoys your confidence.

And now, what was the nature of the controversy to which you have made the national administration a party? It was not a conflict between two sections of the democratic party. No candidates for national offices were in the field; and if the Freesoil section was honest in proclaiming its conversion to the principles of the Baltimore platform and the Inaugural address, there were no national issues at stake. It was purely a New York quarrel, involving questions of mere State policy.

In such a quarrel a member of the Cabinet at Washington has taken sides, and has, in effect, told the democrats of this State whom they must select for their local rulers, and what should be their policy in relation to the canals and other matters of merely local interest. Your denial on this subject can amount to nothing so long as these facts remain unchanged.

Aside from the principle involved, the removal is a matter of little moment. I shall leave the office at the close of this day with greater pleasure than I accepted it six months ago. But I have been assailed without cause, and there has been a gross violation of the democratic doctrine which denies to the Federal Government the right to intermeddle with the purely internal affairs and policy of the States. For these reasons I have not felt at liberty to let your letter pass without some notice.

I am respectfully yours,
GREENE C. BRONSON.
Hon. Jas. Guthrie, Sec'y of Treasury.

If you are sick, the probability is that the root of your suffering is in the stomach. From a weak stomach proceed dyspepsia, languor, oppression in the diaphragm, jaundice, headache, nausea, bodily weakness, dimness of sight, heartburn, costiveness, dysentery, and a legion of other tormenting diseases. Indigestion produces thin blood, and therefore destroys the strength and vigor of the system. To restore the tone of the stomach, and enable it to throw off and dismiss forever all these tormenting and dangerous complaints, nothing is necessary but a persevering use of Hood's German Bitters, prepared by Dr. C. M. Jackson, Philadelphia. There is no mistake, no failure in their salutary effect.

It is said that owing to the disaffection existing in the democratic ranks, the whigs have carried New York by a majority of about 30,000!

A Female Crusoe.—A correspondent of the Newburyport Herald, writing from Santa Barbara, California, under date of September 11, 1853, relates the following singular incident:

We have now in Santa Barbara a great curiosity—an Indian woman who has lived for eighteen years alone upon the Island of San Nicholas, a small island about 45 miles from this place, during which time she has not seen the face of a human being. This island was once peopled by a tribe of Indians, to whom the north-west tribes were hostile. To preserve the remnant of this tribe from destruction, as well as with a view to christianize them, the Padres induced them to come to the main land eighteen years ago. After they were all on board the vessel sent for them, this woman swam ashore to look for her child, which had been left; and a storm springing up in the night, the vessel was compelled to put to sea; on returning, she could not be found. She was known to be alive by those who at times visited the island for the purpose of hunting otters, from the marks of fires and from foot-prints in the sand.

On being approached the other day in the sand.

On being approached the other day she manifested much joy which she betrayed by signs of the most significant character, and at once commenced packing up her few articles of furniture. Whether the sounds that she uttered are words or not has not yet been ascertained. The man who found her is familiar with five or six Indian languages, but he was unable to understand a single expression: it is more than probable that she has forgotten her native tongue entirely. Her clothing consists of skins of birds ^{and} together with the fibres of some tree or plant. Her food has been shell-fish, seals, and a small bulbous root, similar in appearance to an onion, but wholly tasteless.

The needles with which she stitched her garments are made of the sharp bones of a fish. She had two hooks made of a bent nail and sharpened by friction upon a stone. Her lines were beautifully twisted from the sinews of some animal, probably a species of fox which abounds on the island.

Her age, as near as can be estimated, is about 55 or 60; her features are quite masculine; her hair of the color of dark brown, and very fine. This is very remarkable for an Indian; their hair, you know, is always jet black and coarse. In some future letter I will give you a more extended account of this marvel of the 19th century. She is truly an object for the reflection of the philosopher and the inspection of the curious.
