EDITOR'S NOTE AND COMMENT.

Illinois has a first-class political business scandal. Governor Small of that State being indicted for malfeasance in office, for acts rendered when he was State Treasurer, before his elevation to his present high position. He is charged with manipulating State funds whereby he pocketed to the extent of several hundred thousand dollars. The Governor charges that he is being made the victim of a frame-up by his political enemies, and has been asserting that he is above the law and cannot be arrested.

It now appears that Japan will accept participation in the proposed conference on Far Eastern problems, which are most important for its people. It is now known that Japan is not to have a free hand in China and other countries of Eastern Asia, nor is she to be allowed to dominate the Pacific ocean, as she has shown open designs to do. The United States has important interests in these regions and Great Britain and France are quite sure to line up with Pacific Sam on these issues. It is their interest to do so.

One New York banker, recently returned from Europe, says talking sessions there are looking to the United States for aid—to them, he says, we are viewed as the World's Santa Claus. Uncle Sam furnished several European nations funds to fight Germany, and they cry for more financial aid. It is best that the United States treat Europe with some reservation. We have a big job to finance our own demands to a successful finish, and can hardly carry the world's financial burdens on our shoulders, broad as they appear to be.

Negotiations continue over Irish troubles. The subject is not easy of proper settlement. Radicals of both sides are loudly blabbing. It is now suggested that each of the four provinces—Ulster, Munster, Connaught and Leinster—be made separate States with their own local Legislature, all to form one general Government, subject like other British colonies, to the British Parliament. This plan will require much time and thought for consideration—and there is a possibility after all, that it may not result in any workable agreement.

It is about time that our executives and legislators realized the fact that we should cut down taxes and reduce expenses rather than seek new methods to raise more taxes. There has been too much inflation in creating new offices and in increasing officials' salaries. It is time the taxpaying element should assert its objections to remaining the victim of the officeholding class who do little for big pay and appear to be never satisfied with their position. Cut down the number of taxcollectors. Quit planning to put increased burdens on the people.

Mrs. Anna Lindaman of Stuttgart, who had an international reputation as a suffrage leader, is now counselor to the government in the Ministry of Labor in the State of Wurtemberg.

REDUCTIONS IN PAY

May be Made August 1st in Some of Auburn Building Trades.

The impregnable position that the six trades unions have held right along since the close of the war while wages in other trades have crumbled now shows signs of breaking and August 1st may find substantial reductions in force.

It is stated that the demand for painters, masons, carpenters, plumbers, electricians and roofers held good all through the spring and when any suggestions of lower wages were made there was no hearty response. The unions refuse to take all the blame for this, for they say they refused to accept reductions unless the master tradesmen would accept an equal percentage reduction.

The electricians have been paid $1 an hour under an agreement that expires on August 1st. The employing electricians charge from $1.40 to $1.60 an hour for the work of the union men under them. The same is true of the plumbers. Some six months ago there is said to have been a meeting in the Osborne house between the master tradesmen and representatives of the unions in the building trades.

At this meeting it is stated that the employees were asked to accept a 15 per cent cut in wages, but when the representatives of the union had conferred with their locals the answer was sent back that they would accept the proposed reduction if the masters would reduce by an equal percentage their margin of profit.

It is further said that the masters refused to do this on the ground that their overhead costs had increased through the rise in rents and other things so that they could not afford to reduce. This left the situation deadlocked for the time. Now for the last month or so the situation has radically changed.

The demand of the public for lower costs in repairs and new construction in building now practically amounts to a strike. They feel that to pay $12 a day for a plumber or an electrician for eight hours is exorbitant in comparison with other wages and they bluntly tell the master tradesmen that they will defer improvements until costs come down.

In the case of electricians the proposition has been made by the employers that a cut of 10c an hour be accepted as effective August 1st, but some are not satisfied with this figure but would cut to 75c an hour. The union will resist this, but it was intimated today by members that they felt a 10 per cent cut would be fair.

The situation in the plumbing trade is peculiar. During the high tide of the war and afterward practically all plumbing was done through employing plumbers who paid first $6c an hour and then $1, with increased pay for overtime. The master paid the journeymen only for the hours actually put in, but as there was a continuous demand for plumbers, there was practically continuous employment.

For several months now business has been increasingly slack and when masters had no jobs the men were idle without pay. This resulted in a gradual disintegration of the combine between masters and union labor, and journeymen plumbers one by one cut loose from the masters, went out "on his own." They have been going to customers with the statement that they will do the job for $1 an hour while if the job is given to a master plumber it will cost $1.50.

This tendency is on the increase until there is not much left for the master plumbers. The proposition has now been made that the master plumber pay 90c an hour and charge $1.30, but not much relief for the situation is offered in this. There would still be a differential of 90c an hour that the independent plumber could use in competing for jobs and if he can get it at $1 an hour and save the customer the 30c his brother plumber working for a year ter for 30c would soon get sore and go out "on his own" for the $1.00.

The master plumbers are hardly alive to the situation and they declare that it may result in the establishment of the employing plumber for the time while journeymen go out and cut each other's throats in competition. Most of the employers are plumbers and they will go out on equal terms with their former employees and compete for work. One of these stated today that there was no particular use in bucking the situation at this stage of the game.

"The public has struck," he declared, "and there has got to be a readjustment in the skilled trades just as in common labor and everything else. I know that I can go out alone and make a living if any of the plumbers can. I believe there is a place for the employing plumber, but the journeymen have taken the bit in their teeth and are going out to scrap for work. There will be benefits for the public for a while, but I believe that all will suffer in the end."

It is reported that movements are also on foot for reducing the wages of carpenters, painters, masons and roofers, as there is now threatened a sharp lull in all the building trades. Repairs had been neglected for several years and had spring the public took advantage of the reduced cost of materials and abridged their roofs, replaced rotted porches, put up new gutters and conductor pipes, renewed leaky roofs, replaced gas with electric lights, and especially did they paint. When they came to pay the bills they found that labor was the big item and now the demand for a lowering of that labor cost has become insistent.—Auburn Citizen, July 21st.

INDIAN WOMEN FIGHT BATTLE WITH WOLVES.

Boy With Dynamite Wields Up Successful Defence.

Indian trappers arriving at Whinbeg recently brought a story of a thrilling battle between Indian women and wolves, in which the squaws were victorious. During the absence of practically all men on a week's trip over the trapline, the camp situated on a lake forty miles north of Port William, Ontario, was surrounded by a pack of several or eight timber wolves.

A great circle of bonfires was lighted and for a time leaping flames kept the animals at bay. Soon they appeared to overcome their awe of the fire, and the ring of animals narrowed. Then the battle commenced.

Some of the squaws, armed with a few rifles remaining in camp, opened fire on the leaders of the pack. As each wolf fell its companions tore it to pieces and devoured it. The squaws shifted their fire from point to point, picking off an animal here and there, and thus the advance of the wolves, who stopped to devour their mates, was checked.

When the ammunition gave out and the wolves began to draw in, an aged squaw offered to sacrifice herself and was restrained only by force. But just as it appeared that the camp was about to be rushed, an Indian boy thought of some dynamite sticks kept for use in the lake when fishing was bad. A bundle of these was tied together with caps and fuse, and this was hurled into the midst of the wolves, who were rallying for a rush. When the smoke of the explosion had cleared, seventy-two wolves' ears were gathered up, representing thirty-six animals, in addition to those shot and devoured by their ravenous companions.

TWO BIG BARN FIRES IN CAYUGA COUNTY TOWNS.

The large grain barn on the farm of former Supervisor Wally J. Hadden in the town of Throop was destroyed by fire which broke out shortly after 10 o'clock Sunday evening. The fire is believed to have started from spontaneous combustion, perhaps caused by wheat being placed in the barn when slightly wet. In the barn was wheat from 16 acres of land and eight or nine big loads of hay. The barn and contents were a total loss. The damage will run into several thousand dollars. There was partial insurance on the barn and also on the contents.

The large barn on the farm of former Supervisor William Rounds of Niles was destroyed by fire late Monday evening. The barn was stuffed to the rafters with this season's crop of hay. The barn and contents including a large amount of farm machinery and implements were consumed. The damage is estimated at between $6,000 and $8,000 by the owner. The fire was started by the 4-year-old son of Mr. Rounds playing outside the barn with matches. The loss is practically covered by insurance. A team of horses in the barn was rescued just in the nick of time by one of the farm hands.

TRADE AT QUIETEST PERIOD OF THIS YEAR.

Retail Demand for Apparel Reported Improving.

Trade and industry are the quietest of any time this year except in the early part of January, according to trade reviews, which call attention, nevertheless, to a slight springing up in retail demand for apparel evoked by attractive and well advertised price reductions. Bradstreet's says in part:

"The prevailing quiet, however, does not obscure the fact that fashionable cotton goods for next spring, notably gingham, opened at about the present season's prices, have sold well; that cotton goods as a whole are fairly firm; that woollens for next spring are to be opened next week by the leading interests; that shoes and, to a lesser extent, leather and hides, have sold better, with some shoe factories reported exceedingly well employed; that the matter of funding the railways' debts to the Government for capital outlays is making headway; that railways are speeding up shop repair work, that plans for financing cotton and wheat shipments needed by Europe are under active consideration.

"Most life in industry is in the textile branches, in other words in wearing apparel, while such basic lines as iron, steel, coal, coke and lumber are little, if any, more active. The trend of crop reports is not yet clearly defined, further deterioration being claimed in spring wheat and oats, while reports as to winter wheat outlook are rather better."

Poor Year for Fruit is Good Time to Can.

In the poorest year for fruit which the United States has had for a long time, it becomes doubly necessary to preserve all that can be had.

In connection with this, Cornell has issued a timely bulletin on food preservation. This deals with canning and preserving and the salting, drying and various methods of storage. It describes various types of equipment and methods and gives recipes for canning and preserving fruits, vegetables and meats.

Copies of this bulletin will be sent, as long as the supply lasts, to those who apply for it. A post card request, mentioning H 136, addressed to the State College of Agriculture at Ithaca, will bring the publication.

THE RAMBLER.

Everyone is wondering when there will be a let-up on the sweltering weather prevailing practically through all the present month of July. A heavy shower yesterday afternoon cooled the atmosphere for a spell, but sultriness soon prevailed again. There is a general complaint of suffering caused by the extreme heat, accompanied by humidity.

Skaneateles has been visited by many automobile parties this season who are touring the Finger Lakes region, extensively advertised throughout the United States. Central New York is one of the most enchanting sections of the Empire State, which has also other attractive areas—especially the Catskills, Thousand Islands, the Adirondacks, the Lake Champlain and Lake George region, and Niagara Falls.

A spot greatly favored this summer by our townspeople as well as by automobile parties passing through Skaneateles, has been pretty little Cliff Park, with its grateful shade and cooling breezes off the lake. Despite a long spell of excessive heat and drought, the sward there has kept comparatively fresh and green, while the flowers and shrubs have blossomed freely.

The arrest of a young man at the home of his parents in this village early Tuesday morning, for implication in the theft of an automobile in Auburn Sunday night, is only one case among many similar ones taking place daily throughout the country. Some young men entertain the idea of getting a living without working—a most mistaken view of life, and they are bound to come to grief sooner or later.

Veterinarians Are Vanishing Along With Blacksmiths.

There are fewer veterinarians in the Syracuse district this year than there were last year. The number is decreasing yearly. The ranks of physicians and dentists are thinning as well. The facts are revealed in the canvass by the Internal Revenue forces for issuance of permits for use of narcotics.

The decrease most notable among the veterinarians is ascribed to automobiles, which eliminate the need of numerous horse doctors in populous districts. The veterinary is going the way of the blacksmith and is becoming an expert automobile mechanic for all the revenue men know.

The drop in physicians is explained as due to ability of fewer country physicians to care for larger practices with the aid of automobiles. Dentists are moving to sections where there is less competition, it is said. Altogether there are 300 fewer.—Syracuse Herald.

The papers of surrounding towns contain much discussion about the high price of ice cream sodas, but there's no chance for argument at the Rexall Fountain. The sodas are the best ever and the price, 10c, is fair.

TOPICS OF THE TIME.

There was a decrease of over 40,000,000 passengers carried by the railroads during the first four months of 1921, as compared with a corresponding period in 1920. This condition is believed to result from the high rates charged for passenger fares.

The will of James A. Shankland of Cape Vincent, Jefferson county, was filed recently, disposing of an estate of less than $5,000, but asking his relatives to stop wearing mourning for him longer than thirty days after his death. He asked this, he said, "having been all my life adverse to spreading sorrow and gloom, and knowing that the wearing of mourning radiates both." Most of his estate goes to his widow, Julia M. Shankland of New York City.

Great Britain has reduced the debt owned by her to eight foreign countries more than $130,000,000, of which more than half represented payments to and in the United States, according to returns of the British Treasury and covering foreign fiscal operations in the financial year ended on March 31st. Counting in the increase of $12,000,000 in the loans of other allied governments to Great Britain, there was a net reduction of British debt owed abroad of $117,161,000.

All Federal prohibition agents appointed in the future must be on the sunny side of 50, under orders issued by Commissioner Haynes. State directors were notified by the commissioner that hereafter the maximum age limit for appointment would be 50 years unless it was shown that a man "is possessed of unusual qualifications." "It has been found," Mr. Haynes said, "that as a rule men between the ages of 25 and 45 years are best fitted for prohibition enforcement and it is suggested that you bear this in mind in making your selections."

Berlin Janitor's Record "Thurst" Wins Him Freedom.

Germany's champion champagne drinker has been discovered in the person of the janitor for a Berlin apartment house. He "killed" one case of a dozen quart bottles in the first 12 hours; four cases within two days' time, and a total of nine cases in a week and a half.

When he was brought to trial for drinking the champagne, which had been left in his charge for delivery to one of the tenants, the judge set him free on the strength of his physician's testimony that he was subject to uncontrollable "thirst" and became irresponsible when intoxicated.

Preventative for Croup.

The fact that croup can be prevented has been proven time and again. Mrs. Myron DeGroot, Baldwinville, N. Y., writes: "I can certainly recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for croup in children. Whenever mine have been threatened with an attack, a dose or two of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy has freed them up all right." See ads by all dealers.

SMASH THE COST OF GOVERNMENT.

The cost of government is everywhere. It is in the country in coming down the road and in the city in the cost of government, but the cost of government should come down faster and faster than prices for anything else. This is the time of trial and stress, when the nation is being tested as well as of the national government with its prodigious way of doing things.

The cost of government should come down with a rush, because of the number of employees which want on all public payrolls but are no longer needed there and should not be kept there beyond the next pay day; because the wages of day laborers have come down sharply everywhere and, even after superfluous employees are cut off entirely, day laborers are employed in numbers by the municipal, county, State and national governments; because of the heavy drop of prices in materials and supplies, including food, clothing, and all commodities consumed in stupendous quantities by government agencies all over this country.

In this community the largest single payer, many times over, of provisions and general commodities for his persons, families, hospitals and other public institutions is the government of New York City. The largest single payer in the State is the government of the State of New York. The fuel and light they burn, the steel and lumber they use, the thousands and one things they consume every day in the year go to make a colossal sum total.

Feeding and clothing the men of the army and navy out of the national purse is like feeding and clothing the population of many of our cities, indeed of many of our States, put together. The coal and oil which go into the nation's warships are of vast proportions.

The cost of all these supplies is far down from where it was a year ago. For the quantities bought by the government, spenders and consumed by the government managers it is down in the aggregate not merely tens but hundreds of millions of dollars.

Yet government tax machines everywhere and everywhere go on grinding money out of the bleeding taxpayers as if government living expenses were at the war peak of inflation, profiteering and extortion.

If when the costs of all the equipment, materials and supplies he needed to carry on business were dropping steadily and heavily the general manager of a private corporation did not get his operating costs down correspondingly without being told to do so by the directors that manager would be called before the board, not to be instructed to do it but to be fired through the sky.

Any government manager, national, State or local, anywhere in the country and under whatever circumstances, that cannot and does not get down his government operating expenses, and get them down heavily, without being driven to it by budget commissions, investigating committees, and legislative appropriating bodies needs the sky-high treatment without explanation or mercy.

Smash the cost of government!—New York Herald.

BUG MURDERS, POTATO BUG.

John Laux of Waukegan, Wis., believes he has solved the problem of eradicating the potato bug.

A year ago he saw a strange kind of bug engaged in a battle royal with a potato bug. After the mortal combat had ended fatally for the potato bug, which had been stung on the head, Laux gathered up the mystery bug. He searched for several days until he found another bug of the same shape but of a different color. One bug had a black shell with white stripes around the edges and on its back a letter "Y." The other bug was black, with deep red "triangles" on its back in the shape of a triangle.

Laux put the bugs in a box in the cellar. They raised a family of ten during the winter.

When the potato bugs made their appearance in his garden a few days ago he released his mystery bug family. The battle for supremacy raged for three days. Every potato bug was killed.

Laux has sent a pair of his bugs to the United States Department of Agriculture, together with a history of his discovery. He has visions of a government hatchery to raise these enemies of the potato bug.

THOUGHTS OF A BISHOP.

In the course of his tour, Bishop Doane, of the Episcopal diocese of New York, has been making a tour of the State of New York, and his address in the cathedral was the subject for a sermon.

Addressing himself directly to the President, the Bishop declared that the country had not accepted a plan that "did not even recognize God" in its written covenant and that would have tied up with militant Europe. He was also credited with saying that sometimes he thought that "universal peace was too large an enterprise for the human mind," but that "almighty God has a plan."

If the good Bishop who edited the Presidential party with his disapproval is adverse to the League covenant because it does not recognize God, he must also dislike the Constitution of the United States. From first to last there is no mention of God in the Constitution. He would find the same omission in the text of all our treaties with foreign nations. It is safe to predict that if the fruit of the coming disarmament conference at Washington is a written agreement between the United States, Great Britain, France, Italy and Japan, the deity will not be verbally recognized in the instrument. A covenant signed by Buddhist Japan and Confucian China, and including an invocation of the God of Christianity, would be something of a curiosity in international or national history.

The good Bishop's troubled reflection that "universal peace is too large an enterprise for the human mind," must also arouse differences of opinion. We have never heard of any reservation to the divine injunction, "Blessed are the peacemakers." War, like sin, may be an evil ordained by Omnipotence. But for nearly twenty centuries Christian teachers and exhorters have been trying, with more or less success, to abolish or diminish individual sin; and they have never been restrained by the fear that, after all, it is a necessary evil. To say that the extermination of a prevailing religion is "too large an undertaking for the human mind," is not a counsel of hope and courageous effort, but a counsel of surrender and despair.

President Harding evidently does not share the Bishop's view. By calling the Washington conference, he disclosed his resolute purpose to do what he can to forward an enterprise which he manifestly does not consider too large for the human mind.—Syracuse Herald.

ALONE FOR EIGHTEEN YEARS.

Indian Woman, Abandoned on Desert Island, Finally Found by Party of Otter Hunters.

On San Nicholas island, which is uninhabited, a party of sea-otter hunters, landing to chance their luck, found to their amazement, the imprint of human feet on the sandy shore—imprints freshly made. They scattered in search. But the wind shifting and commencing to blow hard, they had to resign their vessel before the maker of the tracks could be found. It was undeniable, however, a human being lived on this bleak, wind-blown island of sand and tall brushwood.

On returning to the mainland they reported the strange discovery, but nothing was done until a Roman Catholic priest was so moved by the news that he persuaded the captain of a small schooner to sail with him for San Nicholas. After two days' searching he discovered this lonely Crusoe—the first of a new kind. For he found inside a low hut of driftwood a woman more like a beast than a person.

She was clad in otter skins, and the feathered skins of the sea-fowl, and her companion was an otter, which she had caught very young and tamed.

The priest with difficulty got her story, for she had almost forgotten how to speak. Many years previously the small tribe of Indians to which she belonged—inhabitants of San Nicholas from time past—had been shifted by the government to the mainland. As they were being taken on board, her baby had fallen into the sea, and she had leaped after him, and in the dusk had been given up as drowned. She reached the shore, however, to find the child was dead. In utter loneliness she had lived there for 18 years.

A small advertisement inserted in the Free Press Classified Advertising column is sure to bring results, and the cost is reasonably low.

FAMINE IN RUSSIA.

The famine in Russia is gigantic. There are whole towns where people are dying of hunger. There are hundreds of villages abandoned because people have gone in search of food. Along the Volga the people are eating grass and roots. In one province the mortality rate has increased 28 per cent in a month. Peasants moving east by the thousands or ten thousands eat the crops as they move like a plague of locusts.

The Bolsheviks laid the foundations for famine well. They lived upon what accumulated capital they could find, accumulation being evil in itself. They destroyed money. They led the peasants and workingmen to believe that they could live without work. They cut off Russia from the world. They wrecked the machinery of export and import, including credit. They did all things necessary so that when the famine should come it would be unrelieved.

Russians do not deserve to die like flies because they have been misguided into belief that they alone have achieved a government of justice and have acted accordingly. Because they have so acted it will be difficult for the world outside to extend them help in helpful measure. But out of their experience will come a warning. Bolshevism, which has withstood the assaults of many armies, will not stand the attacks of hunger. Hunger has caused more revolutions than all the men on horseback.—Syracuse Post-Standard.

Suez Canal to Be Tunnelled.

The great military base at Kantara, from which the British built a military railway through the desert to Palestine, is being dismantled. The line, of course, is permanent. During the war the Suez canal was crossed by a large swing bridge, which is now to be dismantled. Connection between the Egyptian railways and the new line to Palestine will be maintained by means of a trolley which will be built below the Suez canal.

BOLSHEVIST'S LUXURY AMUSEMENTS.

Come Papers Sarcastic Over Bolshevik Dinner Set.

The comic press of the Baltic States has recently indulged in much humorous sarcasm regarding the reported order by M. Gametsky, the Soviet Russian minister to Latvia, of a hand painted china set for his use on state occasions to cost 500,000 rubles. This is equivalent, at present rates of exchange in Riga, to something more than $1,300. The dinner service, according to reports, is to be painted by hand, with each piece representing "a scene from Bolshevik life."

One of the comic papers depicts in a cartoon Gametsky seated at a table surrounded by this spectacular china, but pushing away the plates and asking for something to eat.

In all of the Baltic States where the Soviet Government has legations the ministers and their aids live in luxurious contrast to conditions said to prevail in Moscow and Petrograd, say the Baltic newspapers. Each of the ministers has a large automobile, and summer villas at the seaside have been engaged for the Riga legation personnel. Some of the ministers have also bought elaborately furnished town houses. Their legations are housed in large hotels in Helsingfors, Riga, and Kovno, the entire buildings having been taken over for them.

Between Riga and Moscow and Riga and Petrograd luxurious saloons and sleeping cars are operated for the benefit of Bolshevik officials, while all other passengers must crowd into unheated, packed third class cars. The newspapers Riga and in other Baltic States frequently point to these conditions and contrast them with Communist ideals.

THE HANDSHAKE.

There is an immense variety in the manner in which persons shake hands and the action is a fair indication of character.

You meet a man of generous impulses—one whom you feel you can trust through thick and thin. He does he greet you? He grasps your hand firmly and gives it a heart shake as though he enjoyed the exercise; and he may hold it a moment longer than is necessary.

But what of the man who stretches out a limp arm and barely allows you to touch the tips of the fingers before withdrawing them. The action tells you that he lacks generosity, and is merely extending the civilities because he thinks possibly you may be of use to him some day.

Then there is the young fellow who gives you two fingers in an aggressively patronizing way and fancies he is conferring a favor upon you by doing. It is the sign of an empty head.

The sign of the bore is the pump handle greeting. He grasps your hand in his flabby fist and works you arm up and down for some moment before beginning to weary you with conversation.

The quick handshake—two or three energetic shakes before dropping the hand—indicates the man of business. He is quite pleased to meet you, but time is money. He'll talk to you when he isn't busy. Then there is the sentimental person, who likes to grasp both your hands, or one year with both of his. He puts his head close to your own and seems to breathe eternal friendship. Often his words are to be taken with a grain of salt—his "eternal friendship" would stand much of a strain.

A cold, damp hand is laid on your own by another type of man, who ceases to take any further part in the operation. He is generally a thorough selfish and self-centered individual.

ALONE FOR EIGHTEEN YEARS.

Indian Woman, Abandoned on Desert Island, Finally Found by Party of Otter Hunters.

On San Nicholas island, which is uninhabited, a party of sea-otter hunters, landing to chance their luck, found to their amazement, the imprint of human feet on the sandy shore--imprints freshly made. They scattered in search. But, the wind shifting and commencing to blow hard, they had to regain their vessel before the maker of the marks could be found. It was undeniable, however, a human being lived on this bleak, wind-blown island of sand and tall brushwood.

On returning to the mainland they reported the strange discovery, but nothing was done until a Roman Catholic priest was so moved by the news that he persuaded the captain of a small schooner to sail with him for San Nicholas. After two days' news that he persuaded the captain of a small schooner to sail with him for San Nicholas. After two days' searching he discovered this lonely Crusoe—the first of a new kind. For he found inside a low hut of drift-wood a woman more like a beast than a person.

She was clad in otter skins, and the feathered skins of the sea-fowl, and her companion was an otter, which she had caught very young and tamed.

The priest with difficulty got her story, for she had almost forgotten how to speak. Many years previously the small tribe of Indians to which she belonged—inhabitants of San Nicholas from time past—had been shifted by the government to the mainland. As they were being taken on board, her baby had fallen into the sea, and she had leaped after him, and in the dusk had been given up as drowned. She reached the shore, however, to find the child was dead. In utter loneliness she had lived there for 15 years.
