A FEMALE CRUSOE.

THE "San Francisco Call" contains an interesting account of an Indian woman who was accidentally abandoned on San Nicolas Island, off the coast of South California, and spent eighteen years alone there before she was rescued. The fact of her existence was discovered by a man who went from the mainland to hunt for otters, and who found footprints sunk deeply in the ground. He was unable to follow up these indications till nearly three years, when one of a party who accompanied him came suddenly upon the object of their search. She was in a small circular enclosure made of brush-wood, about 5 feet high and 6 feet in diameter, with a small opening in one side. She was clothed with a garment made of skins of the shag, a species of duck that can neither walk nor fly. This garment almost reached to her ankles when she stood erect. She was sitting cross-legged, skinning seal-blubber with a rude knife made of a piece of hoop iron driven into a piece of wood. There was no covering on her head, except a thick matted mass of hair, of yellowish brown colour, probably owing to exposure to the sun and weather; it was short, as if the ends had matted off. (The colour, probably owing to exposure to the sun and weather; it was short, as if the ends had rotted off. There were some wild dogs on the island, a few of which kept near her, and seemed to regard her as a mistress. She had lived on a plant resembling cabbage, called by Californians 'palo santo,' and a root known by the name of 'coreomita,' also blubber of the various kinds of seal, &c. She had a rude apparatus for catching shellfish, and strong fishing lines, made of seal sinews, which seemed to indicate that she fished in the ocean. The expression of her face was pleasing, her features were regular, her complexion much fairer, and her form more symmetrical than that of the Indian women on the adjoining mainland. Some suspect that she belonged to a tribe much further north. She could not understand anything said to her in any of the Indian dialects of South California, but she had a wonderful capacity for conversing by signs. She retained all her teeth, but they were worn low, supposed to be due to her chewing tough and hard articles of food. Her age appeared to be about fifty years. She bowed to all who came near her, greeting them with a smile. She freely accompanied her discoverers to their vessel, but her conduct at once convinced them that she retained the virtue of female modesty. She showed singular dexterity in making water vessels from grass and asphaltum, a substance which is plentiful both on the island and mainland. She seemed to recognise various appliances of civilization. She died about seven weeks after reaching the mainland, partly from the effects of a fall, mainland, partly from the effects of a fall, partly from dysentery, brought on by eating fruits and vegetables. Padre Gonzalez, the superior of the mission to Santa Barbara, has sent her dress of shag-skins, her basket and implements to Rome, to the Museum of the Propaganda.
