

GENERAL DISPATCHES.

ASSOCIATED PRESS DISPATCHES TO THE DAILY AND WEEKLY PRESS.

Hounded by his Wife.
COLUMBIA, July 27.—Alfred Bonderet was today murdered by his wife, and thrown into a cistern. The murderer is in jail.

Arthur Confident.
NEW YORK, July 26.—Arthur has been at home all day. He believes in the President's recovery, having received reassuring dispatches from Blaine and Secretary Brown.

Large Rewards.
ST. LOUIS, Mo., July 27.—Governor Crittenden says the result of his conference with the railroad authorities is that he will issue a proclamation within 48 hours to be scattered broadcast over Missouri, offering $50,000 for the arrest of the train robbers. Twenty thousand for the two ring leaders (probably the James boys) and $8000 each for the other five men.

The Prison Inquiry.
SAN FRANCISCO, July 27.—The Prison Investigating Commission to-day heard testimony of a number of witnesses, jurists, lawyers, clergymen, detectives, etc., on the ground of the question of the penal system. To-morrow will be devoted to inspection of the prison. The next public session will be held in San Francisco August 1st.

Gold's Railroad Scheme.
ST. LOUIS, July 26.—The Republican's Marshal, Texas, special says: It is reported that Governor Brown has filed his resignation as Vice President of the Texas & Pacific Railroad, and that it will be accepted in a short time, and that he will be appointed to the position of General Solicitor for the Gulf road, with headquarters at St. Louis. A dispatch from Greenville, Tex., says it is now asserted that Jay Gould will change the East Line & Jay Gould Narrow Gauge road, recently acquired by him, to a broad gauge line, and extend it to the Dallas. This road runs in between and parallel with the transcontinental main line of the Texas Pacific, and when completed to the Dallas, will be two hundred miles long, and that Gould's object in changing its gauge is to enable him to get more extensive control of the Texas & Pacific, by threatening to construct a competing line to the Pacific Coast, using East Line & Jay Gould road as a nucleus to be opened in harmony with the Iron Mountain road.

St. Louis, July 27.—The Republican's Denton, Texas, special says: Deputy U. S. Marshal Martin, lately brought in under arrest James Terry, charged with complicity in the railroad robberies committed by the notorious Sam Bass gang in '78. He was arrested at Ocala, Indian Territory. This leaves but three of Bass' gang at large—Davis, but in the Union Pacific Railroad robbery at Big Springs, Neb., and is now in New Orleans; Harry Underwood, the most desperate of the band, who is running a cattle ranch in the pan handle of Texas; and Frank Jackson, who is now in Arkansas. The whereabouts of these men is well known to the officers of the State, but in the absence of reward for their capture, and the well-known desperate character of the men, no efforts will likely be made to arrest them.

Tom Williams, who shot and killed two men at Grapeland two weeks ago, was found dead in the woods yesterday, near Denton.

Arizona News.
TOMBSTONE, July 26.—In consequence of the heavy rain floods in the San Pedro carried away all the mill dams but that of the Boston Mill and all are shut down. They will hardly get them repaired this month.

The bullion yield will be $150,000 to $200,000 per cent of last month. The Contention has discharged most of the men in the mine owing to shutting down of the mine. E. James, formerly superintendent of the Sierra Nevada, is now here making a survey of the Contention mine. There was a rich strike in the mine.

THE NATION'S ANXIETY.

Unnecessary Alarm Regarding President Garfield.

[Special Dispatch to the Press.]

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 26, 8:30 A. M.—The President was somewhat restless during the night and the fever which subsided after our last bulletin, rose again at midnight and continued till 3 A. M., after which it again subsided. He is now about as well as yesterday at the same hour. His pulse is 102, temperature 98.4, respiration 18.

(Signed.) D. W. Bliss and others.
EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 26, 11:10 A. M.—The President is resting comfortably, his surgeons express themselves as satisfied with his present condition. Regarding the rumor circulated that the President had another chill this morning, the symptoms at noon today are favorable. Several small pieces of shattered rib came from the wound this morning while dressing.

WASHINGTON, July 26.—Secretary Blaine sent the following to-day to Minister Russell, London. The President's symptoms at noon today are favorable. Several small pieces of shattered rib came from the wound this morning while dressing.

NEW YORK, July 26.—All sorts of alarming rumors concerning the President's condition have been flying about to-day and great anxiety is felt throughout the city. The crowd outside the White House are greatly incensed, and people have a depressed look. The Associated Press dispatches up to this time (2 P. M.) do not confirm the discouraging reports. Dr. Hammond expresses the belief that the President already has recovered.

CINCINNATI, July 27.—The Inter Ocean's Washington special says another operation was performed on the President by Dr. Agnew this morning. A piece of the fractured eleventh rib and one or two small pieces of splintered bone have been cut away, the operation being made through the incision cut made Saturday. The unfavorable symptoms of last night and this morning are said by the doctors to be due to irritation of the wound by particles of bone in the wound.

OFFICIAL BULLETIN.
EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 27, 8 A. M.—The President slept "soundly" last night from 8 P. M. to 8 A. M., with but a single break of short duration at 11 P. M. Since five this forenoon he has dozed quietly, awaking at intervals. There have been 55 rigors; he takes his nourishment well and his general condition is improving. He expresses himself as feeling better and more rested. Pulse, 94; temperature, 98.4; respiration, 18. (Signed) D. W. Bliss, and others.

Despatch by Indiana.

THE HEROINE OF SAN NICHOLAS.

A Woman's Life For Eighteen Years on a Desert Island.

A Modern Fact More Marvellous Than the
Time-Honored Fiction of Robin-on Crusoe.

BY J. H. RAWLINS.

Sometime prior to the year 1833 the Mission Fathers of Lower California, in their efforts to christianize and accustom to honest labor the Indian tribes on the coast, had placed them on various islands of the Santa Barbara group, to pursue the fishery of otter and seal. One of these, San Nicholas, scarcely eight miles long by four broad, was after some time abandoned, and the whole of its inhabitants were brought away in a vessel sent by the good fathers. While they were leaving, a gale sprung up, and it was at the same time discovered that a child had been left behind. The mother, a half-breed Indian woman of that a child had been left behind. The mother, a half-breed Indian woman of superior intelligence to her race, implored the captain to send a boat ashore for it. He refused, on the ground of peril to all the rest, if they did not put at once to sea. Frantic and excited at the loss of her child, the woman leaped into the sea and swam back to the island in search of it. The vessel sailed, but having been wrecked off San Francisco, no return was practicable, and for fifteen years no steps were taken to ascertain if the woman was living or not. Father Gonzales, having never forgotten her disappearance, offered at length a reward of $200 for the rescue of woman or child, and the result, after three years more, was the discovery of the woman on the island, still in good mental and bodily health, but with the power of articulate speech gone. The vouchers for this extraordinary narrative, and its details, were recently given at length in Scribner's Monthly. The relics of this female Crusoe are still to be found at Santa Barbara.

A tale of mother's love, so deep,
Long solitude, self-sacrifice—
It glorifies an islet steep
That in the far Pacific lies,
Where, 'midst despairs, and hopes, and fears,
A woman lived for eighteen years.

Alone her footstep trod it's strand,
Alone she watched the pathless sea.
Of sex marked by Creator's hand
For kindred, love, society;
On the small isle, St. Nicholas:
What fiction could such fact surpass?

'Twas thus: It's dwellers, scarce a score—
Women and children, youth and age—
Were leaving its ungenial shore—
'Twas midst a sudden tempest's rage—
In schooner sent by wise command
Of Mission Fathers on mainland.

The wind blew hard, the waves were tossed
To fury, and, as died the day,
Beat on the rugged rock-walled coast,
And rolled into the open bay,
Then rose, more mournful than the gale,
A widow's cry, a woman's wail.

"My babe! Oh God! 'tis left behind!
'Twas in the arms, I heard and thought,
Of sailor, that I here might find
What most on earth I loved and sought.
Oh! let the boat to land return;
A mother's prayer you cannot spurn."

"Mark you those crested waves that break
On rocks ere long to be our grave,
If we no open water seek?

To-morrow we return to save,"
The master said, and gave command
To leave at once the dangerous strand.

The frantic mother, midst the roar
Of storm-tossed wave and tempest wild,
Leaps midst their foam, swims, drifts to shore,
In desperate quest of her lost child.
Man gauges the star depths above;
What lore can sound a mother's love?

A woman not devoid of grace,
Widowed, yet young, reserved in mien.
Of medium height, of Indian race,
Had vanished, by no eye was seen,
For eighteen years; alas! her child,
Unfound, a prey to creatures wild.

Vanished from sight, but not from mind;
Who could forget that thrilling cry?
Did she the babe she sought e'er find?
Lived she, or did she, lingering die?
Thus mused the captain, vowed to seek
Again the isle and rocky creek.

A schooner in those seas alone,
She daily plies her coasting trade,
Whose growing wants, each day more shown,
Cast private needs and cares in shade,
Till she is shipwrecked, the crew all saved,
The scene upon each heart engraved.

Dead or alive, one Father's mind
The question haunts year after year;
Woman or child perchance to find

The question haunts year after year;
Woman or child perchance to find,
Some one to that lone isle shall steer,
Though now full fifteen years had sped,
And seek the lost, all else thought dead.

What task, with gold to win, is hard?
What toil will not be gladly braved?
Ere long a bounteous reward,

For child or long-lost woman saved,
Secured another vessel small,
Whose master searched the island all.

Two hours, and he its limits paced
In length, its breadth he trod in one;
Fox and wild dog his keen eye traced,
Then, hid behind a sandy dune,
He found a curious dwelling made,
Of ribs of whales, in circles laid.

Of human trace no more, but seal
And otter, countless on the strand;
Listeners at home new interest feel,
Seal-fishers and a larger band
Remanned the bark, which cleft the waves
Of seventy miles, and reached those caves.

A second time from shore to shore
The isle is searched, midst summer's glow,
Gay butterflies the grass flit o'er,
The ~~facus~~ blooms, the wild flowers blow.
In vain, no further trace they found,
Of human life its brief space round.

Six weeks they plied their fishery,
And once a sailor, 'midst a gale,
Upon a cliff, surveyed on high
A moving form; his cheek grew pale;

Along the ledge it swiftly ran,
Shouted or beckoned, ghost of man.

Then disappeared. Three years passed by,
And just before the band returned,
Walking by night, their leader's eye,

'Neath moon full orb'd, that almost burn'd,
So bright its blaze--still searching round,
Saw a small footprint on soft ground.

"The woman of the isle, my God!

And she lives still, these prints confess;"
He lifts his voice, "Yes, here she trod --
A female foot in slenderness."

He rends the air in Spanish tongue,
Searching ravines and rocks among.

Next morn still searched, found in a tree,

A basket of wove rushes made,
Filled with such useful housewifery

As thread and needles, bone; there laid
With robe of featherwork, fine sewn,
And ornaments of wood and stone.

Elsewhere, a larder of dried meat,

Secured from birds and beasts of prey;
And wedged in clefts beneath the feet

Dried fish, securely stowed away.
But further sign of woman there
No eye could trace, in earth or air.

A few more weeks, and all prepare

No eye could trace, in earth or air.

A few more weeks, and all prepare
To leave the isle, their leader sure
The long-lost woman still is there;
And once more, moved by golden lure,
He seeks again the hut of bone,
Where once had lived some creature lone;

Again saw footsteps, and a head
Creeping and hiding in the brake;
Some wild dogs round about it sped,
And heard a voice to them that spake,
At which they bounded to the hill,
Trained, clearly, by a human will

Thus was she found, with fear half wild,
Than most of Indian blood more fair,
With countenance refined and mild,
With long, thick, matted, soft brown hair;
Shading her eyes, transfixed with dread,
At sight of man - old memories dead.

But soon true womanhood she showed;
Clad in a tunic, feather formed,
Her heart like coals new kindled glowed.
As to expected guests it warmed,
And with her sex's social mood
From roasted roots she offered food.

Found to be lost, amidst her kind,

From roasted roots she opened food.

Found to be lost, amidst her kind,

Lost, too, all she had known of speech,
For soon she drooped, though glad in mind,

By gentleness endeared to each;
And in her noon of life she died.
With loving hearts and homes beside,

But not before she oft revealed,

By signs, how passed those lingering years,
Nor her wild grief, at first concealed,

For her lost babe, devoured her tears,
Her terror, then her deep despair,
Then calmness, left to linger there.

She died, her very name unknown.

Her place of birth, her years, her creed,
Not without veneration shown

For some great Spirit, sought in need;
And, as she died, the good divine
Traced on her brow the Christian's sign.

Such is the story, every page

As gospel in its details true
To men well-known, advanced in age,
Its very relics, clear to view
Of female Crusoe, often told
In Californian land of gold.
