

BY TELEGRAPH.

DEAD SHOT.

The Indian Scout Who Killed Private Livingston.

ASSOCIATED PRESS REPORTS TO THE PRESS.

Weather in San Francisco.
SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 15.—A cold rain set in about noon, with a strong wind. The barometer indicates a heavy storm.

Congressman Farwell.
CHICAGO, Nov. 16.—Congressman Farwell denies that he intends to resign his seat in the house on account of the press of business.

The War-Bureau.
NEW YORK, Nov. 16.—Louis Washington and Col. Bliss don't regard the quashing of the Star-route information as serious. New evidence has been discovered on which the case can be prosecuted.

The San Rafael Horror.
SAN RAFAEL, Nov. 15.—The verdict of the Coroner's jury is that Mrs. Prince was killed by H. Osborn with an axe, cutting and smashing her head. Osborn committed suicide with strychnine.

The Oakland Savings Bank.
SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 16.—Bank Commissioners Coleman and Watt have reported as to the result of their examination of the financial affairs of the Oakland Savings Bank, that the institution is in good condition. Its assets are reported at $2,300,040.15.

"The Destroyer."
NEW YORK, Nov. 16.—Erison's new torpedo boat "The Destroyer" was exhibited before Government officials and a number of the visiting French officers. The latter expressed great astonishment at the successful workings of the submerged gun. It is considered a key to the revolution of naval warfare.

Immigration Association of California.
SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 16.—At a meeting of the Immigration Committee of the Board of Trade held yesterday afternoon, a permanent organization was effected under the title of "The Immigration Association of California." Articles of incorporation and by laws were adopted. The association will have no capital stock.

The Indian Question.
WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.—The annual report of the Secretary of the Interior is largely devoted to a fresh discussion of the Indian question. He strongly recommends that liberal provisions be made by Congress for teaching the Indian youth our language, and that upon as just terms to the Indians, the number of reservations to be greatly reduced. That on such reservations as have not adopted farming without irrigation, efforts should be made to teach Indian husbandry, also that the more civilized reservations of Indians be encouraged to abandon their tribal relations.

Tariff Convention.
CHICAGO, Ills., Nov. 15.—The Industrial League of America, opened the First National Tariff Convention this morning. The objects of the convention are purification of the public services, the restoration of the national flag upon the ocean, the advancement of the interests of ship building, dissuading of the tariff, and the securing of a more equitable reduction of the internal taxes of the general Government, and the discussion of the means to naturalize new industries upon our soil. The convention assembled with ex-Governor Rufus Bullock of Atlanta in the chair. He made a brief address stating the objects of the convention.

Oregon and Washington.
PORTLAND, Or., Nov. 15.—A very hard wind storm prevailed in Clackamas county last night. At Oregon City many houses were unroofed and trees uprooted. The damage will aggregate considerable.

News is received of a cowardly assassination in Wallawa Valley, Union county, near the Idaho border. John Hawk, in company with a man named Adams, last night, at Oregon City many houses were unroofed and trees uprooted. The damage will aggregate considerable.

Adams has the largest and best selected stock of Dry Goods in Santa Barbara county. Buying in large quantities for each enables him to sell goods cheaper than others.

THE TRIPARTITE ALLIANCE.

Brain, Brawn, and Capital—Hollister's Labor Views.

EDITOR PRESS.—W. W. Hollister again comes to the fore with a letter on the labor question. He takes what is the popular side of this subject in California, and defends his positions manfully. However we may differ from him, his opinions are entitled to respect, and his clear, temperate, logical presentation of them, to commendation. The conclusions fairly deducible from the arguments contained in this last and his preceding utterances on the labor question, may be briefly and imperfectly summed up thus:

1. Labor is indispensable to all produced wealth. Natural wealth requires the combined efforts of the tripartite alliance, Labor, Brain and Capital, to uncover it. The prosperity of a country and people flows from the union and operation of these three principal factors. It is necessary to the other; all should be permitted to work under normal conditions, and each have a fair chance; when one languishes or suffers, the others suffer with it. The three should be friends and partners, working together for their own and the common good, not as enemies, engaged in mutual throat-cutting.

2. Without labor there is and can be no wealth, no prosperity. A man or a people that stops working is doomed to grow poor from that moment. Idleness ends in poverty, misery and crime.

3. Capital is the laborer's enemy. The laborer who works diligently enough to more than supply his material needs, will have a surplus left; he will become a capitalist.

4. If muscle oppresses capital by imposing hard conditions upon it—that is, makes it do more than its proper share in the co-partnership—it will retire from the firm and from the field of enterprise, go into idleness, or leave the country. So labor will ender for good, if employment and progress will stop or be seriously retarded.

5. Labor, brain and brawn are undemocratic, tyrannical and bad; they are enemies, not friends, of the laborer the more they are united. The partners in this great firm, Brain and Capital, whose power is world-wide, and whose power for good is immeasurable, must check the unfettered, or evil result, alike to the one and the other—Laborer or Capital, seeking monopolizing power, are equally to be deprecated.

6. A new country like California, rich in undeveloped, natural wealth, requires many more laborers than she has ever had. These should be free to come from any country, and free to work at prices mutually satisfactory to them and to their employers. The Chinaman should be as free as any other immigrant landing on our shores. The genius and spirit of the American Constitution and of American institutions would be outraged were this freedom denied him. The demand for supply and demand will fix the price of labor in a country having commercial relations with the rest of the world. Free labor is always, never bad for the country. No free man, doing honest work, can be harmful to the Republic.

7. The Chinaman is not preferred by our California proprietors as a laborer; he is not preferred as a competitor in European or better, the American better, if he will but apply himself. He can beat the Chinaman always and everywhere, when he lays the law to his work.

8. But there are not enough Europeans and Americans here to do our work. The laborer must be free to do the time being as a reinforcement to the weak army of laborers. When he ceases to get high wages—when he goes on strike, or when he is unemployed, he becomes normal, he will go home and take service in the army of some other country, leaving the field to our own people; for the Chinaman is neither fool nor slave—he is free to go when and where he will, and when the inducement of high wages which brought him here has ceased, he will come no more and stay no longer.

9. The American being the superior man, is capable of driving the inferior Asiatic from the field of labor in California, and Colonel Hollister is quite willing that he should do it, provided he does not let the work stop. That must go on, or we will starve. The logical result of the state of things which Hollister seeks to bring about would ultimately be the expulsion of the Chinese. He is essentially a lover of the Chinese; he is essentially American in his thoughts, his ideas and prejudices.

10. The argument against the Chinese that they do not engrail themselves upon our civilization—our political system of social policy—is an argument in favor, not against their employment. The Chinese laborer, not his social influence, nor his dead body. Let him carry himself and them to China where he is king, beyond his labor—and when the trade is made, he will be a free man. He goes from our shores, leaving both parties to the bargain satisfied. John as free as the Irishman, and has as much right to the land of the living as the Irishman. He is not a "coolie" as the Irishman has. Do we hear any howl against Patrick or Bridget for doing their duty? If we do, we want the Chinaman's labor more than we want the money we pay him in exchange for it, why buy it? Why trade?

11. The widespread apprehension or prejudice is an apprehension of a "Mongolian invasion" of America, which shall overrun the Coast and eventually drive out our own people, is baseless, foolish, idle. The number of Chinese in the State has largely decreased, though wages are still high.

12. California is no longer an isolated community, where the price of labor can be arbitrarily fixed. She must compete with her products in the markets of the world, and do business on about the same general plan as other communities and countries, or she will fall behind in the race for industrial prosperity and commercial supremacy. She has ample room for more laborers to commence and carry on new enterprises. The coming of the Chinaman to perform the simpler and lower services necessary to be performed—services which the American avoids—does not really work harm to the latter, but enables him to rise higher. There is room for all.

These are the salient points of the arguments, imperfectly presented. No review can be so clear as the paper itself. Many of the propositions presented are axiomatic and as old as the science of political economy itself. The argument is rather for a cheaper than for a dearer labor. The latter does not mean men of any nationality "to work for ten cents a day." This fact ought in justice to be admitted and noted by those of his hot opponents who are inclined to make violent assaults upon his labor views. But he does want "labor cheap enough to justify employment." He thinks it is not so now in California, and points for comparison and proof to prices in other countries and countries. Reference is had in the discussion chiefly to unskilled labor. What the price for that should be is not specifically named, but in a general way it is said that it should not be so high as to place an embargo upon business or cripple the proprietor. This is right—clearly a defensible position.

The point that most concerns the American citizen, who is at the same time an American citizen—a man justly sensitive hat harm befall him from the idea, the power and the acts of the Chinaman—is whether the demand for lowering of the price of labor will work to his benefit or his injury in the long run. The point of view of the Chinaman is that the demand for lowering of the price of labor will work to his benefit or his injury in the long run. The point of view of the Chinaman is that the demand for lowering of the price of labor will work to his benefit or his injury in the long run.

The terms "cheap" and "dear," as applied to labor and its products, are indeed delusive. The laborer is a seller of his labor and a buyer of its products, the products of other laborers, in one form or another. It is rather a question of the proper relation of the selling price. It makes no difference whether the laborer receives one dollar or two dollars a day, provided he can buy as much with one dollar under certain conditions as he can with two dollars under other conditions. The first essential thing is CONTINUOUS EMPLOYMENT at fair prices; the next essential thing is the purchasing power of the dollar.

At fair prices; the next essential thing is the purchasing power of the dollar. At fair prices; the next essential thing is the purchasing power of the dollar. At fair prices; the next essential thing is the purchasing power of the dollar.

At fair prices; the next essential thing is the purchasing power of the dollar. At fair prices; the next essential thing is the purchasing power of the dollar. At fair prices; the next essential thing is the purchasing power of the dollar.

At fair prices; the next essential thing is the purchasing power of the dollar. At fair prices; the next essential thing is the purchasing power of the dollar. At fair prices; the next essential thing is the purchasing power of the dollar.

At fair prices; the next essential thing is the purchasing power of the dollar. At fair prices; the next essential thing is the purchasing power of the dollar. At fair prices; the next essential thing is the purchasing power of the dollar.

At fair prices; the next essential thing is the purchasing power of the dollar. At fair prices; the next essential thing is the purchasing power of the dollar. At fair prices; the next essential thing is the purchasing power of the dollar.

At fair prices; the next essential thing is the purchasing power of the dollar. At fair prices; the next essential thing is the purchasing power of the dollar. At fair prices; the next essential thing is the purchasing power of the dollar.

At fair prices; the next essential thing is the purchasing power of the dollar. At fair prices; the next essential thing is the purchasing power of the dollar. At fair prices; the next essential thing is the purchasing power of the dollar.

This space is reserved for the ARLINGTON.

Santa Barbara's First-Class

HOTEL.

Dixey W. Thompson,

Manager.

P. N. NEWELL

—DEALER IN—

Fresh Groceries,

At every Description.

675 STATE STREET, - - SANTA BARBARA

Canned Goods, Crockery, Cutlery, Wood and Willow Ware.

All of which will be sold as cheap as any house in Santa Barbara.

PAINTING

House, Sign, and Ornamental Painting.

Painting, Walling, Gilding, and Stenciling.

Apply at residence on Haley street.

STATE STREET MARKET

Wholesale and Retail Butchers.

FRESH AND SALT MEATS

POULTRY, EGGS AND BUTTER

Apply to J. R. MAQUINE

CHIEF LAND.

Fort Sale at a Bargain

Well-watered land, all fenced and cross-fenced. Living spring on the property. An orchard of over 200 assorted Fruit Trees; small house and barn. 1500000 or six acres of corn and beans will go with the place. Immediate purchaser is desired as the owner is about leaving for the East. Six thousand dollars was refused for this place at one time—can now be bought for $3,500. Terms to suit. Apply immediately to W. H. WOODBRIDGE.

Real estate Agent.

First N't B's Building, July 18-19.

CENTRAL RESTAURANT.

Meals, - 25 Cts.

Board, - $4 per Week.

Meals and Lodging, $6 per Week.

For Sale.

One of the most attractive estates in Ventura County, containing about 2,300 acres of land, including the town site of Santa Paula; 100 acres in oranges and lemons, nine years old, and in excellent condition; 175 acres in alfalfa. A five-sixth interest in the above will be sold at an extremely low price close an estate.

For further particulars inquire of JOSEPH J. PERKINS, STATE ST., SANTA BARBARA

ORANGE & LEMON.

GORHAM & CO.

DEALERS IN LUMBER

CHAS. PIERCE

Redwood & Pine Lumber

JOSEPH J. PERKINS

STATE ST., SANTA BARBARA

THE HEROINE OF SAN NICHOLAS.

A Woman's Life For Eighteen Years on a Desert Island.

A Modern Fact More Marvellous Than the
Time-Honored Fiction of Robinson
Crusoe.

BY J. H. RAWLINS.

Sometime prior to the year 1833 the Mission Fathers of Lower California, in their efforts to christianize and accustom to honest labor the Indian tribes on the coast, had placed them on various islands of the Santa Barbara group, to pursue the fishery of otter and seal. One of these, San Nicholas, scarcely eight miles long by four broad, was after some time abandoned, and the whole of its inhabitants were brought away in a vessel sent by the good fathers. While they were leaving, a gale sprung up, and it was at the same time discovered that a child had been left behind. The mother, a half-breed Indian woman of superior intelligence to her race, im-superior intelligence to her race, implored the captain to send a boat ashore for it. He refused, on the ground of peril to all the rest, if they did not put at once to sea. Frantic and excited at the loss of her child, the woman leaped into the sea and swam back to the island in search of it. The vessel sailed, but having been wrecked off San Francisco, no return was practicable, and for fifteen years no steps were taken to ascertain if the woman was living or not. Father Gonzales, having never forgotten her disappearance, offered at length a reward of $200 for the rescue of woman or child, and the result, after three years more, was the discovery of the woman on the island, still in good mental and bodily health, but with the power of articulate speech gone. The vouchers for this extraordinary narrative, and its details, were recently given at length in Scribner's Monthly. The relics of this female Crusoe are still to be found at Santa Barbara.

A tale of mother's love, so deep,

Long solitude, self-sacrifice—

It glorifies an islet steep

That in the far Pacific lies,

Where, 'midst despair, and hopes, and fears,

A woman lived for eighteen years.

A woman lived for eighteen years.

Alone her footstep trod it's strand,

Alone she watched the pathless sea.
Of sex marked by Creator's hand

For kindred, love, society;

On the small isle, St. Nicholas:

What action could such fact surpass?

'Twas thus: It's dwellers, scarce a score—

Women and children, youth and age—

Were leaving its ungenial shore—

'Twas midst a sudden tempest's rage—

In schooner sent by wise command

Of Mission Fathers on mainland.

The wind blew hard, the waves were tossed

To fury, and, as died the day,

Beat on the rugged rock-walled coast,

And rolled into the open bay,

Then rose, more mournful than the gale,

A widow's cry, a woman's wail.

"My babe! Oh God! 'tis left behind!

'Twas in the arms, I heard and thought,

Of sailor, that I here might find

What most on earth I loved and sought.

Oh! let the boat to land return;

A mother's prayer you cannot spurn."

"Mark you those crested waves that break

On rocks ere long to be our grave,

If we no open water seek?

To-morrow we return to save,"

The master said, and gave command

To leave at once the dangerous strand.

The frantic mother, midst the roar
Of storm-lashed wave and tempest wild,
Leaps midst their foam, swims, drifts to shore,
In desperate quest of her lost child.
Man gauges the star depths above;
What lore can sound a mother's love?

A woman not devoid of grace,
Widowed, yet young, reserved in mien,
Of medium height, of Jewish race,
Had vanished, by no eye was seen,
For eighteen years; alas! her child,
Unfound, a prey to creatures wild.

Vanished from sight, but not from mind;
Who could forget that thrilling cry?
Did she the babe she sought e'er find?
Lived she, or did she, lingering die?
Thus mused the captain, vowed to seek
Again the isle and rocky creek.

A schooner in those seas alone,
She daily plies her coasting trade,
Whose growing wants, each day more shown,
Cast private needs and cares in shade,
Till she is shipwrecked, the crew all saved,
The scene upon each heart engraved.

Dead or alive, one Father's mind
The question haunts year after year;
Woman or child perchance to find,
Some one to that lone isle shall steer,
Though now full fifteen years had sped,
And seek the lost, all else thought dead.

And seek the lost, all else thought dead.

What task, with gold to win, is hard?

What toil will not be gladly braved?
Ere long a bounteous reward,

For child or long-lost woman saved,
Secured another vessel small,
Whose master searched the island all.

Two hours, and he its limits passed.

In length, its breadth he trod in one;
Fox and wild dog his keen eye traced,

Then, hid behind a sandy dune,

He found a curious dwelling made,
Of ribs of whales, in circles laid.

Of human trace no more, but seal

And otter, countless on the strand;
Listeners at home new interest feel,

Seal-fishers and a larger band
Remanned the bark, which cleft the waves
Of seventy miles, and reached those caves.

A second time from shore to shore

The isle is searched, midst summer's glow,
Gay butterflies the grass flit o'er,

The cactus blooms, the wild flowers blow.
In vain, no farther trace they found,
Of human life its brief space round.

Six weeks they pined their fishery,

And once a villager, 'midst a gale,
Upon a cliff, surveyed on high

A moving form; his cheek grew pale;

Along the ledge it swiftly ran;
Shouted or beckoned, ghost or man.

Then disappeared. Three years passed by,
And just before the band returned,
Walking by night, their leader's eye,

Neath moon full orb'd, th~~at~~^{is} almost burn'd,
So bright its blaze—still searching round,
Saw a small footprint on soft ground.

"The woman of the isle, my God!

And she lives still, these prints confess;"

He lifts his voice, "Yes, here she trod—

A female foot in slenderness."

He rends the air in Spanish tongue,
Searching ravines and rocks among.

Next morn still searched, found in a tree,

A basket of wove rushes made,

Filled with such useful housewifery

As thread and needles, bone; there laid

With robe of featherwork, fine sewn,

And ornaments of wood and stone.

Elsewhere, a larder of dried meat,

Secured from birds and beasts of prey;

And wedged in clefts beneath the feet

Dried fish, securely stowed away.

But further sign of woman there

No eye could trace, in earth or air.

No eye could trace, in earth or air.

A few more weeks, and all prepare

To leave the isle, their leader sure

The long-lost woman still is there;

And once more, moved by golden lure,

He seeks again the hut of bone,

Where once had lived some creature lone;

Again saw footsteps, and a head

Creeping and hiding in the brake;

Some wild dogs round about it sped,

And heard a voice to them that spake,

At which they bounded to the hill,

Trained, clearly, by a human will

Thus was she found, with fear half wild,

Than most of Indian blood more fair,

With countenance refined and mild,

With long, thick, matted, soft brown hair;

Shading her eyes, transfixed with dread,

At sight of man--old memories dead.

But soon true womanhood she showed;

Clad in a tunic, feather formed,

Her heart like coals new kindled glowed,

As to expected guests it warmed,

And with her sex's social mood

From roasted roots she offered food.

From rotten roots she opened food.

Found to be lost, amidst her kind,

Lost, too, all she had known of speech,

Far soon she drooped, though glad in mind,

By gentleness endeared to each;

And in her noon of life she died,

With loving hearts and homes beside,

But not before she oft revealed,

By signs, how passed those lingering years,

Nor her wild grief, at first concealed,

For her lost babe, devoured her tears,

Her terror, then her deep despair,

Then calmness, left to linger there,

She died, her very name unknown,

Her place of birth, her years, her creed,

Not without veneration shown

For some great Spirit, sought in need;

And, as she died, the good divine

Traced on her brow the Christian's sign.

Such is the story, every page

As gospel in its details true

To men well-known, advanced in age,

Its very relics, clear to view

Of female Crusoe, often told

In Californian land of gold.

From Our Wreckham (Walsp.) Advertiser, May 28, 1861.